SCHEDULE "D" - NOTICE OF CERTIFICATION, OBJECTION PROCESS AND SETTLEMENT APPROVAL HEARING

[SHORT FORM NOTICE]

LEGAL NOTICE

Did you apply for, and were denied, a conversion of parental benefits to sickness benefits under the Employment Insurance Act?

A proposed settlement may affect you. Please read this notice carefully.

The Federal Government of Canada ("Canada") and Jennifer McCrea of Calgary, Alberta (the "Representative Plaintiff") have reached a proposed settlement in a class action lawsuit.

WHAT IS THIS CLASS ACTION ABOUT?

This lawsuit alleges that during the period from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013, officials with Service Canada and the Canada Employment Insurance Commission were negligent in denying sickness benefits to individuals who were in receipt of parental leave benefits under the Employment Insurance Act ("EI Act") and were ill, injured, or in quarantine during their parental leave. Canada is defending this action.

The Federal Court certified this class action on May 7, 2015, which means that it is permitted to proceed to trial as a class action. This case has not yet gone to trial and there has been no judicial decision made on the merits of this lawsuit.

The certified class action seeks a declaration that the EI Act was administered negligently and damages.

The Representative Plaintiff is represented by Cavalluzzo LLP ("Class Counsel").

The proposed settlement must first be approved by the Federal Court before there is any compensation available to members of the class.

WHO IS INCLUDED?

The proposed settlement provides for monetary compensation to the following individuals ("Class Members"):

All persons who, during the period from March 3, 2002 to, and including, March 23, 2013:

i) Applied for and were paid parental benefits under the EI Act or corresponding types of benefits under Quebec's An Act Respecting Parental Insurance;

ii) Suffered from an illness, injury or quarantine while in receipt of parental benefits;

iii) Applied for sickness benefits in respect of the illness, injury or quarantine referred to in ii; and

iv) Were denied a conversion of parental benefits to sickness benefits because:

(a) the person was not otherwise available for work; or

(b) the person had not previously received at least one week of sickness benefits during the benefit period in which the parental benefits were received.

A person is also a Class Member where they applied to convert to sickness benefits while in receipt of maternity benefits if the illness, injury or quarantine continued into the parental portion of their benefit period.

Estates of Class Members may be eligible. A claim must be filed by the Estate Executor for deceased class members.

If the settlement is approved, all Class Members except those who validly "Opt Out" or are deemed to have opted out of the settlement will be bound by the proposed settlement, will be covered by the releases in the proposed settlement, and will not have the right to sue Canada for alleged harm caused by denied conversion of parental benefits to sickness benefits under the EI Act during the class period from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013.

WHAT DOES THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT PROVIDE?

If approved, the settlement provides:

(a) Class Members who establish that they applied for sickness benefits for an illness, injury, or quarantine during their parental leave, and were denied, are eligible for compensation.

(b) ESDC will determine the amount of your payment. Canada has agreed to make payments to eligible Class Members in an amount that is equivalent to the amount of sickness benefits that they would otherwise have received.

HOW DO I GET ANY MONEY?

The proposed settlement must be approved by the Federal Court. If it is approved, you may make a claim for money. To do so, you must complete a Claim Form and send it to ESDC during the Claims Period. More information on how to make a claim will be available in a further notice if the proposed settlement is approved.

HOW MUCH MONEY WILL I GET?

The amount of compensation that you receive will depend on your weekly EI benefit rate and the number of weeks you were ill, injured, or in quarantine while in receipt of parental benefits from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013. The details are explained in the proposed Settlement Agreement. A copy of the proposed Settlement Agreement is available online at: www.cavalluzzo.com

Class Counsel are also seeking approval of legal fees and disbursements in the amount of $2,212,389, together with applicable taxes thereon. The legal fees will be paid by Canada in addition to the compensation paid to eligible Class Members. The Federal Court will decide if the amount of the legal fees is fair and reasonable.

WHAT IF I AGREE OR DO NOT AGREE WITH THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT?

Class members may participate in the settlement approval hearing. If you do not agree with the proposed settlement, you have two options:

1. Participate to Support or Object to the Settlement in writing:

You may mail or email a letter that includes your name, address and telephone number and explain why you support or object to the proposed settlement. You may also use the Objection Form which can be found at: www.cavalluzzo.com. If you have commenced a legal proceeding against Canada relating to denied conversion of parental benefits to sickness benefits under the EI Act from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013, and you do not discontinue it on or before the Opt Out Deadline, you will be deemed to have Opted Out of the settlement.

BASIC INFORMATION

1. Why did I get this notice?

The Federal Court authorized this notice to let you know about a proposed settlement and about your options before the Court decides whether to approve the proposed settlement. This notice explains the lawsuit, the proposed settlement, and your legal rights.

2. What is a class action?

3. What does this class action lawsuit complain about?

Jennifer McCrea, of Calgary, Alberta (“Representative Plaintiff”), commenced the lawsuit and is represented by Cavalluzzo LLP (“Class Counsel”). The Federal Government of Canada ("Canada") is defending the case.

During the class period from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013, the EI Act provided for 15 weeks of maternity leave benefits for biological mothers, including surrogate mothers, who cannot work because they are pregnant or have recently given birth, and 35 weeks of parental leave benefits for parents who are caring for a newborn or newly adopted child or children. Sickness leave benefits are for people unable to work because of sickness, injury, or quarantine. This lawsuit alleges that during the period from March 3, 2002 to March 23, 2013, officials with Service Canada and the Canada Employment Insurance Commission were negligent in denying sickness benefits to individuals who were in receipt of parental leave benefits under the EI Act and were ill, injured, or in quarantine during their parental leave.

4. Has there been a trial?

The Federal Court certified this class action on May 7, 2015, which means that it is permitted to proceed to trial as a class action. This case has not yet gone to trial and there has been no judicial decision made on the merits of this lawsuit.

The certified class action seeks a declaration that the EI Act was administered negligently and damages.

5. Why is there a proposed settlement?

The Representative Plaintiff and Canada have agreed to a proposed settlement. By agreeing to the proposed settlement, the parties avoid the costs and uncertainty of a trial and potential delays in obtaining judgment, and Class Members receive the compensation described in this notice and in the proposed settlement agreement. In this case, it also means that the Class Members will not need to testify in court. The Representative Plaintiff and Class Counsel think the proposed settlement is in the best interests of all Class Members.

(b) ESDC will determine the amount of your payment. Canada has agreed to make payments to eligible Class Members in an amount that is equivalent to the amount of sickness benefits that they would otherwise have received.

9. What am I giving up in the proposed settlement?

Once the proposed settlement becomes final, you will give up your right to sue Canada for the claims being resolved by this proposed settlement. You will be "releasing" Canada, which

You may hire and pay for your own lawyer and commence your own lawsuit. If you want to commence your own lawsuit, you must Opt Out. If you Opt Out, you must abide by all applicable limitation periods and should consult a lawyer.

Further information on how to Opt Out will be available if the proposed settlement agreement is approved.

HOW TO RECEIVE A PAYMENT IF THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT IS APPROVED

11. How will I receive a payment?

To ask for a payment, all Class Members must complete and submit a Claim Form. All claims will be assessed by the ESDC. Eligible Class Members will not need to testify in court. Once the claim is verified by the Claim Administrator, Class Members will receive full compensation as soon as reasonably possible.

More information about the claims process, including the Claim Form, will be provided in a further notice if the settlement is approved.

Before anyone can file a Claim Form or be assessed, the Federal Court must decide whether to grant final approval of the proposed settlement and any appeals must be resolved (see "The Approval Hearing" below). If there are appeals, resolving them could take time. Please be patient.

12. How will payments be calculated?

The ESDC will review your Claim Form and determine if you qualify for a payment. If you do, the ESDC will determine the amount of your payment based on the process described in the Settlement Agreement.

13. What if I disagree with the decision?

If you wish to dispute the decision, you may seek a review before a Prothonotary of the Federal Court.

14. What if my claim is denied?

If your claim is denied, you will receive a notice of the decision. There will be a process to seek a review of the denial decision, with more information to be provided in a further notice if the settlement is approved.

2. The plaintiffs claim on their own behalf and on behalf of all Class Members:

(a) an order pursuant to the Rules certifying this action as a class proceeding and appointing them as the representative plaintiffs;

(b) a declaration that the defendants negligently administered and failed to implement the EI Act – including through negligent misrepresentations about the EI Act – in a manner that caused damage to the plaintiffs and Class Members, as particularized below;

(c) a declaration that the defendants were unjustly enriched by these actions, as particularized below, to the detriment of the plaintiffs and Class Members, and that there exists no juridical reason to allow the defendants to retain the amounts by which they were unjustly enriched;

(i) such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court seems just.

THE NATURE OF THE ACTION

3. This action concerns the defendants' failure, during the Class Period, to implement the 2002 amendment.

4. The 2002 amendment provides that all persons eligible to collect employment insurance benefits under the EI Act who suffered from an illness, injury, or disability before or during their parental leave, could then collect up to fifteen (15) weeks of sickness leave benefits.

5. Instead of implementing the 2002 amendment, the Commission – on or shortly after March 3, 2002 – implemented a far more modest change to the detriment of the Class. In particular, the Commission at all times during the Class Period implemented the 2002 amendment as if it was designed merely to provide sickness leave benefits to women for a period of illness, injury, or disability suffered while pregnant and before the commencement of any parental leave.

6. Further, the plaintiffs plead that – shortly after the 2002 amendment – the defendants took active steps to defeat any chance that anyone, including the plaintiffs and Class Members, would ever be able to successfully obtain a sickness leave benefit for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave, and despite the provisions of the 2002 amendment.

7. Until the Rougas Decision was released, as particularized below, nobody, including the plaintiffs and Class Members, had ever apparently received from the Commission a sickness leave benefit for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave.

8. The defendants have refused to implement the Rougas Decision. The plaintiffs' applications for sickness benefits during a parental leave period were rejected after the Rougas Decision was released and the defendants had determined not to seek judicial review therefrom.

THE PARTIES

Jennifer McCrea

9. McCrea resides in the City of Calgary. During the Class Period, McCrea gave birth to a child, applied for and was in receipt of parental leave benefits, suffered from an illness, injury, or disability during the course of her parental leave, and applied for sickness leave benefits.

10. McCrea's application for sickness leave benefits was denied because she was on parental leave or not otherwise available to work at the time of her sickness leave application.

11. On October 15, 2010, prior to the birth of her child, McCrea was informed by her family doctor that she was suffering from high blood pressure. She was advised to cease working immediately.

12. McCrea informed her employer of her health status and took a flexible leave from her employment as an Office Manager with Safe Self Storage Inc., a Calgary area storage company. Her employer advised her that she was welcome to return at any point during her leave.

13. McCrea also made an application for employment insurance sickness benefits. As she was expecting the birth of her child within the weeks subsequent to her initial claim, a Service Canada representative advised her that she would be placed directly on maternity benefits as opposed to sickness benefits.

14. McCrea gave birth to Logan McCrea on October 31, 2010 and spent several months spending time with and caring for this child.

15. McCrea was found eligible for fifty (50) weeks of combined maternity and parental benefits inside of a benefit period that was scheduled to extinguish on October 20, 2011.

16. On May 9, 2011, McCrea had an MRI performed. McCrea suffers from an uncommon genetic mutation which greatly increases her risk of developing breast cancer. As such, she has been closely monitored for symptoms of the disease.

17. The results of the MRI were abnormal, and on July 9, 2011 she underwent an MRI-guided biopsy.

18. McCrea was diagnosed with breast cancer on July 18, 2011.

19. On July 29, 2011 McCrea met with a surgical specialist. Given McCrea's medical history, the surgeon recommended a bilateral mastectomy. Surgery was scheduled for August 11, 2011.

20. McCrea's physicians were initially of the opinion that she would require at least three (3) weeks of recovery time from the date of the surgery.

21. On August 2, 2011, McCrea contacted a Service Canada office by phone and spoke with a Commission agent regarding how to go about making a claim for sickness leave. She requested a conversion of her parental leave to sickness leave beginning August 11, 2011.

22. McCrea was advised by the Commission at that time that if the sickness leave claim was successful, her parental leave benefits would be temporarily suspended and sickness leave benefits would be paid during her period of recovery from surgery.

23. McCrea underwent a bilateral mastectomy on August 11, 2011. Following surgery, McCrea became incapacitated. In particular, she was unable to lift her arms and movement was difficult and painful. McCrea also underwent a period of recovery from the emotional trauma commonly associated with the bilateral mastectomy procedure.

24. During this period after the surgery, McCrea was unable to work or do any of the household tasks required to care for her two young children. McCrea's husband and mother completely took over the child care duties while she recovered.

25. On August 19, 2011, McCrea saw her doctor for a post-operative follow up. Her doctor determined that she required additional weeks of recuperation, until at least September 26, 2011. McCrea's treating physician wrote a letter to Service Canada indicating she would remain incapacitated during this period.

26. McCrea provided this updated information in-person at a Service Canada office. During this visit to the Service Canada office, she inquired about the status of her benefits. She was told by a Commission agent to phone the central Service Canada hotline during the following week.

27. On August 30, 2011, after making repeated attempts to contact the hotline and receive an update, McCrea received a phone call from a Service Canada worker inquiring about her work availability.

28. On September 19, 2011, McCrea was advised for the first time by the Commission that they took the position she was ineligible for sickness benefits.

29. McCrea was told over the phone, and later in writing, that as she had indicated that she was on a parental leave and had not proven that she would be available for work if she was not sick, she was not eligible for sickness benefits. The Commission thus denied McCrea's claim for sickness benefits in its entirety.

Carissa Kasbohm

30. Kasbohm resides in the City of Calgary. During the Class Period, Kasbohm gave birth to a child, applied for and was in receipt of parental leave benefits, suffered from an illness, injury or disability during the course of her parental leave and applied for sickness leave benefits.

31. Kasbohm's application for sickness leave was denied because she was on parental leave or not otherwise available to work at the time of her sickness leave application.

32. Throughout the latter stages of her pregnancy, Kasbohm experienced severe fatigue, nausea and body bruising. On October 1, 2010, Kasbohm was forced to cease working as a chef at a popular Calgary restaurant due to these symptoms. Her employer advised her that she was welcome to return at any time following her recovery and at any point during her anticipated maternity and parental leave.

33. On October 14, 2010, during a maternity check up, she was diagnosed with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura ("TTP"), a rare and serious blood disorder. Kasbohm was immediately admitted to hospital.

34. On October 16, 2010, Kasbohm gave birth to her first son, Castiel Kasbohm.

35. On or around October 31, 2010, she applied for and was found eligible for fifty (50) weeks of combined maternity and parental benefits in respect of the birth of Castiel Kasbohm.

36. From October 2010 through January 2011, Kasbohm underwent treatment in respect of her TTP diagnosis. This included, but was not limited to, blood transfusions, chemotherapy-like pharmacological interventions, and twenty-nine (29) rounds of plasmapheresis, in which the patient's blood plasma is replaced with donor plasma.

37. During this period of time, she was completely disabled and unable to work or care for her child. Care for Castiel Kasbohm was provided by her husband, mother and grandmother.

38. In December, 2010 Kasbohm was advised by Hospital staff that she should apply to convert her EI maternity and parental leave benefits to EI sickness leave benefits.

39. Kasbohm attempted to do so at or around this time, and was told over the phone by a Commission agent that she was ineligible for sickness benefits due to her being in receipt of maternity benefits. She was informed by the Commission at that time that she would be eligible for sickness benefits at the end of her claim as long as she applied prior to the exhaustion of her parental leave benefits.

40. In September 2011, Kasbohm was advised by her physicians that she would be medically unable to return to work following the end of her parental leave. She again applied for EI sickness benefits and provided the Commission with medical documentation which indicated that she was incapacitated.

41. More particularly, Kasbohm applied for sickness leave during a period in which she was still receiving parental leave benefits.

42. Throughout October, 2011, Kasbohm attempted to contact Service Canada to inquire about the status of her sickness benefits claim. On November 9, 2011 Kasbohm was contacted by the Commission and informed that it appeared she would not be eligible for benefits.

43. Kasbohm subsequently received correspondence from the Commission on or about November 10, 2011 indicating that she had been ruled ineligible for sickness benefits as she was not "otherwise available for work".

44. Kasbohm's disease has gone into temporary remission. However, she fatigues rapidly and gets sick easily in whole or in part because she took a course of medication which will act as an immuno-suppressant for years to come. She was unable to return to work following the expiration of her maternity and parental leave, and remains without income of any kind.

The Commission

45. During the Class Period, the Commission was responsible for administering, interpreting, and enforcing the EI Act correctly whenever a claimant applied for employment insurance benefits, including parental leave and sickness leave benefits.

46. During the Class Period, the Commission was an agent of the defendant Attorney General, or more particularly, an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada pursuant to the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34 and the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11.

47. During the Class Period, all officers and employees of the Commission were employed by HRSDC.

HISTORY OF THE 2002 AMENDMENT

The History of the EI Act

48. The federal government has administered an employment insurance scheme since the early 1940s. Its purpose initially had been to provide temporary income replacement to workers facing involuntary unemployment. As the next paragraphs demonstrate, the purpose of EI changed over time to incorporate new social norms and thinking, and the EI Act is now widely regarded as a form of "social" insurance designed to provided economic support during periods of temporary interruptions of employment.

49. In the early 1970s, EI was expanded to reflect changing norms in the Canadian labour market, including the increased presence of women into the workforce. This era of reform included the introduction of "special benefits" that provided income replacement for workers unable to work due to sickness or pregnancy.

50. In the 1980s, the EI Act was further expanded to recognize periods of unemployment taken by parents to care for their adoptive or natural born children, defined in paragraph 1 as "parental leave". Parental leave has always been classified as a "special benefit", like sickness and maternity leave.

51. In 1990, the federal government enhanced the EI Act's special benefit provisions by allowing claimants to combine their maternity, parental, and sickness benefits up to a certain amount of weeks. The "bundling" of special benefit entitlements was subject to a strict cap on the maximum amount of benefit weeks allowed. Under the 1996 version of the EI Act, for instance, this cap was set at thirty (30) weeks.

52. By 2001, the amount of parental benefits available to claimants was increased from 10 to 35 weeks in order to enable parents to spend more time at home during their child's early period of life. Following the introduction of enhanced parental leave benefits in the 2000 federal budget, s.12(5) of the EI Act was amended to provide for a 50 week bundling of special benefits cap.

The McAllister-Windsor Decision

53. On March 9, 2001, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal issued the McAllister-Windsor decision. The complainant in that case challenged the prohibition on stacking special benefits beyond the then 30-week legislated cap. After the cap was extended to 50 weeks, the challenge incorporated a challenge to that cap as well. The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal found that the operation of the provision had an exclusive adverse effect on women and disabled claimants, as only those claimants who sought to combine their full entitlements to 15 weeks of maternity leave, 35 weeks of parental leave, and 15 weeks sickness leave benefits, would be subject to a cap limiting the benefits to 50 combined weeks.

54. As a result of the decision, HRDC ("HRDC", as it was stylized prior to 2003) was ordered by the Tribunal to cease applying the provisions of the EI Act in a discriminatory manner.

The Response of HRDC to McAllister-Windsor

55. HRDC considered several options in respect of how the department would respond to the ruling. Following the release of the decision, the Ministers of HRDC and Finance were informed by Departmental staff that the government had until March 3, 2002 to come into compliance with the Human Rights Tribunal directive.

56. By November 30, 2001, HRDC had drafted a proposal calling for an amendment to the EI Act. The amendment was intended to provide an extension of the 50-week cap on benefits by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy and "during a parental benefit claim", thereby ensuring the EI Act did not discriminate against any claimant on the basis of gender or disability.

57. The HRDC proposal was approved. An amendment to the EI Act intended to implement the proposal was included in changes to the EI program announced in relation to the December 10, 2001 Federal budget. It is this amendment that became the 2002 amendment defined above.

58. HRDC staff prepared a set of question-and-answer statements for their Minister's use in discussing the proposed change. In these statements, it was consistently indicated that the 2002 amendment was intended to provide an exception to the 50 week cap for special benefits by extending it by one week for each week of sickness benefits taken by biological mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental leave claim.

59. HRDC advised the Minister to inform the media and relevant stakeholders that the amendment was needed because, "[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits".

Bill C-49 [the 2002 amendment]

60. In 2001, the Government introduced Bill C-49, the Budget

Implementation Act, 2001. Included in Part 3 of the legislation were improvements to the EI Act. These improvements included the new provisions designed to ensure that claimants who qualified for maternity, parental and sickness benefits would be provided with an expanded benefit period of up to sixty-five (65) weeks. It is this that constitutes the 2002 amendment.

61. The plaintiffs plead and rely on the official statements of all representatives of the Government who spoke to the Bill in the House of Commons, Senate, and in Parliamentary committees. Without exception, these statements confirmed that the government's intent was to directly implement HRDC's proposed response to the McAllister-Windsor directive and decision. Every government representative that spoke to this portion of the Bill indicated that the 2002 amendment would ensure that the cap on special benefits would be extended for each week of sickness leave taken by a mother during their pregnancy or during their parental leave.

62. Further to paragraph 61, the plaintiffs plead and rely more particularly on the following the statements:

(a) The statements contained in the November 30, 2001 "EI Court Challenges" briefing document prepared for the Minister of Finance, and in particular the statement indicating the HRDC proposal would "[e]xtend the 50-week cap on benefits for women by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy, and during a parental benefits claim.";

(b) The statements contained in the 2002 document prepared for the Minister of HRDC titled "Briefing Note: Program Amendments Included in Budget Implementation Bill", and in particular the statements indicating that the 50 week cap to special benefits in the EI Act would "be extended by one week of sickness benefits up to 65 weeks when paid to biological to mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental benefit claim" (sic) and that the amendment was needed because "[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits";

(c) The statements contained in a document entitled "Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: Why Making Changes" produced for the Minister of HRDC, indicating the change was made to benefit mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits [who] may be unable to claim all of their special benefits";

(d) The statements contained in a document entitled "Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: More Benefits to Biological Mothers", indicating the Bill C-49 change would mean "the total number of weeks of special benefits a claimant could receive would be extended by a limited number of weeks for biological mothers when they use sickness benefits during pregnancy or during a parental benefit claim.";

(e) The February 6, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum, made to the House of Commons, that Bill C-49 "increases [the EI Act benefits] ceiling by one week for each week of sick leave taken by a mother during her pregnancy or while she is receiving parental benefits, so that she may benefit fully from the special benefits.";

(f) The February 20, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum to the Standing Committee on Finance that "Bill C-49 further improves the delivery of parental benefits under EI [...] To enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, effective March 3, 2002 this cap will increase by one week for each week of sickness benefits she takes while pregnant or while receiving parental benefits.";

(g) The March 19, 2002 statement of the Hon. Anne C. Cools, made to the Senate in respect of the C-49 changes to the EI Act, that "to enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, [the legislative] cap increases by one week for each week of sickness benefits she take while pregnant or receiving parental benefits."; and,

(h) The statement contained in a backgrounder published on the Employment Insurance Commission's website following the coming into force of Bill C-49 that indicated the change was in respect of those mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits".

THE RESPONSE OF THE EI COMMISSION TO THE 2002 AMENDMENT

63. The Commission and the defendants did not adopt the 2002 amendment following its coming into force. In particular, the change described in the proposal which they had drafted for the relevant Ministers and which was now set out in the 2002 amendment was simply not implemented.

64. The defendants' actions during this time laid the foundation upon which the Commission would, throughout the Class Period, wrongly and tortiously administer the EI program and incorrectly and tortiously advise the Class Members regarding their entitlement to sickness benefits.

65. In the months that followed the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission took active steps to ensure the 2002 amendment would not be implemented. In particular, the Commission did not describe the 2002 amendment as being designed to benefit parental benefit recipients who suffered from an illness, injury or disability during their parental leave.

66. Instead, the Commission implemented narrow aspects of the 2002 amendment in such a way as to defeat all sickness leave claims by the Class Members. In particular, the Commission incorrectly adopted "availability to work" criteria to 2002 amendment claims such that no claimant who made a sickness leave claim while on a parental leave would be deemed by the Commission to be sufficiently "available for work" and, thus, no claimant would ever qualify for sickness benefits. This implementation ignored the clear wording of the very proposal the Commission and HRDC had drafted and submitted to the relevant Ministers, and which had subsequently been passed by as the 2002 amendment by Parliament.

67. The Commission's revised position regarding the scope of the 2002 amendment was confused and inconsistent, but for the most part the position misrepresented entirely the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

68. The defendants' internal and external communications during the Class Period at times described the 2002 amendment as providing sickness leave benefits to women "before or after" the commencement of a maternity leave, while other public communications assured claimants that benefits would be available "before or after" a maternity or parental leave.

69. In addition to denying claimants who sought sickness leave benefits during their maternity or parental leave periods, the latter "before or after maternity or parental leave" explanation of the change incorrectly purported to make benefits available to claimants who file a claim "after" a parental leave. In fact, a sickness leave claim filed by a claimant after their parental leave was impossible to make, as all eligible claimants seeking to file a new claim after their parental leave claim had been exhausted would be rejected. In practice, these claimants would find that their original parental claim would be expired, and that they lacked sufficient qualifying hours to make a valid fresh claim. Thus, a sickness leave claim submitted following a parental leave claim could not succeed, the Commission's representations notwithstanding.

70. Further to this misrepresentation, the "before or after" explanation of the effect of the change was an entirely inaccurate reflection of the Commission's own understanding of the 2002 amendment, as is reflected in the materials the Commission produced in proposing the change and the Hansard statements of the parliamentarians responsible for the Bill pleaded above. These materials, without exception, expressly indicated the change was being made in respect of sickness benefit claims made before or during a parental leave claim only. At no point in any of the documents drafted by the Commission prior to the passage of the 2002 amendment was there any indication that the change was intended to provide sickness benefits "after" a parental leave claim.

71. The defendants' tortious implementation of the 2002 amendment included, but was not limited to, the following activities:

(1) "Legislative Training" of Commission Employees

72. In the months following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission undertook an extensive, country-wide "legislative training" program for Commission employees in respect of the 2002 amendment.

73. Participants in this training were provided with materials and instructions regarding the effect of the 2002 amendment. These materials again reflected that benefits might be available for claimants "before or after" a parental leave, which was not in accordance with the Commission's clear understanding of the amendment as providing for benefits before or during a parental leave claim. Participants to the legislative training were at no point advised that parental leave claimants could make sickness claims while on their parental leave, or that claimants who sought to make a new claim "after" their leave might be disqualified on qualifying-hours grounds.

74. Further, during the course of this training, the Commission did not advise those being trained to cease applying and interpreting the EI Act so as to require that all sickness leave claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness leave period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave.

75. Given the knowledge held by HRDC agents regarding the content of the 2002 amendment, this training was provided either recklessly or in bad faith.

76. The inadequacy of the training provided to Commission Employees was exacerbated by the fact that, in all written materials such employees would have available to them to review a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave, those materials inaccurately set out or actively defeated the 2002 amendment. Particulars of some of these materials are set out below.

77. In addition to those materials, the Commission failed to create an accurate jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, or alternatively failed to update its existing jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, to reflect the presence of the 2002 amendment. The failures included maintaining cases and digests of sickness leave cases which indicated that, for all sickness leave claimants, the claimant must demonstrate an "availability" to work on each and every day of their sickness leave claim.

(2)Improper Updating of the Employment Insurance Website

78. At all times during the Class Period, HRDC and HRSDC maintained an Employment Insurance website currently located on the Internet, or world wide web at the URL http://www.servicecanada.gc.ca/eng/sc/ei/index.shtml.

79. The Employment Insurance website allowed claimants to submit and request information regarding EI claims, and provided those seeking EI benefits with advice and information about the program, its history, the operation of the EI Act, and the eligibility of claimants in various scenarios to obtain EI benefits. During the Class Period, claimants were routinely referred to the website by Commission agents. The website was portrayed by the defendants as a trustworthy source of information regarding employment insurance.

80. During a brief period shortly after the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the website published some information regarding the 2002 amendment which at points accurately described the effect of the 2002 amendment. On April 10, 2002, the Commission posted a backgrounder under the website's "What's New?" section at the URL:

http://web.archive.org/web/20020402054832/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/menu/budget2001_e.shtml.

This backgrounder characterized the 2002 amendment as affecting biological mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits" and stated the change was meant to ensure "full access to special benefits for these mothers", while indicating the 2002 amendment would allow "full access to special benefits for mothers who claim sickness benefits before or after their maternity claim".

81. This backgrounder was present on the website for approximately 18 months and was removed on or around January, 2004. Following the removal of this language, the website would never again use language indicating a sickness leave claim would be possible while receiving special benefits, including parental leave benefits.

82. On or about July 18, 2002, the Commission updated its website's Frequently Asked Questions ("FAQ") section in respect of "Maternity, parental and sickness benefits". This update, which was present on the website throughout the Class Period, advised claimants that "A combination of maternity, parental and sickness benefits can be received up to a combined maximum of 50 weeks".

83. The website's FAQ document, following the passage of the 2002 amendment and throughout the Class Period, included a proviso for claimants who "received sickness benefits before or after [their] maternity benefits." In this section, the website illustrated that sickness leave benefits would only be available to those claimants who received sickness benefits before their parental benefits commenced. The scenarios set out by the defendants on their website highlighted that claimants seeking a sickness leave benefit following the commencement of parental benefits would be ineligible for further benefits.

84. Further, not one scenario described in the FAQ document on the website set out a situation whereupon an eligible claimant would be entitled to receive sickness leave benefits for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave.

85. During the Class Period, the website has consistently provided inaccurate information to those seeking information on the changes introduced by the 2002 amendment. On July 24, 2008, the website published a document which purported to describe the EI Act's "Recent Legislative Context". This document informed the public that, effective March 3, 2002, the 2002 amendment would "ensure access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

86. On October 16, 2009, the website published a similar document indicating that the 2002 amendment changed the maximum number of combined weeks of special benefits from 50 to 65 weeks, and that "these provisions ensure full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits."

87. Visitors to the website during the Class Period, then, would be alternately advised that sickness leave benefits would be available to them if they applied for them prior to or following a maternity claim or prior to or following a maternity or parental claim.

88. No Class Members, and no visitor to the website, would have ever been advised that they would be eligible for sickness leave benefits if a claim was made during a parental leave claim.

89. Further, the plaintiffs plead that, at all times during the Class Period, the Commission maintained on its website an interpretation of the sickness leave requirement that all sickness leave claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness leave period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave.

90. The plaintiffs plead, and the fact is, that in addition to the websites and documents set out above but excluding the FAQ document set out earlier, the defendants at all material times in all documentation prepared by the defendants, in printed or electronic format, materially misrepresented the scope of the 2002 amendment. In particular, these material misrepresentations of fact, including by facts stated expressly or by material omission were:

(a) statements that only those making a sickness leave claim before or after a maternity leave or parental leave claim would be eligible to obtain a sickness leave claim; and,

(b) statements that all sickness leave claimants had to demonstrate that, on every day of their sickness leave, they were otherwise available for work, a legal requirement that would always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave period.

91. In its first monitoring and assessment report drafted by HRDC for its Minister, for instance, which report was drafted shortly after the 2002 amendment was enacted, HRDC wrote that "[e]ffective March 3, 2002, [the 2002 amendment] ensure[s] full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

92. This language, limiting the 2002 amendment to sickness leave claims filed before or after maternity or parental leave periods, was consistently used in each written, electronic, and publically available document produced by the defendants during the Claim Period, including in most of the documents pleaded and relied on with more particularity above and below.

(3)Failure to Update the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles

93. The plaintiffs plead and rely upon the Commission's Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles in effect from time to time during the Class Period. The version published on February 21, 2004 remains available at the URL:

http://web.archive.org/web/20040221011714/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/loi-law/guide-digest/13_2_0_e.shtml.

94. At all times during the Class Period, the Digest contained and contains the principles applied by the Commission when making decisions on claims for benefits under the EI Act. It is intended as a reference tool for all users, including those without a legal background or knowledge of employment insurance, and including all Class Members.

95. Further, the Digest was one of the primary documents, if not the primary document, made available to the Commission to assist it in implementing the EI Act during the Class Period.

96. While the Digest was revised multiple times following the March 3, 2002 coming into force of the 2002 amendment, language indicating that claimants may have an entitlement to combinations of special benefits beyond 50 weeks did not appear in the Digest until September, 2006. Thus, any claimant referred to the Digest as a source of authoritative information regarding their entitlement to special benefits would remain wholly unaware until September 2006 that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

97. Further, all employees or agents of the Commission charged with the duty of reviewing claims and implementing the EI Act would, on reviewing the Digest until September, 2006, remain wholly unaware that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

98. This lack of updating included, but was not limited to, Chapter 13.2.1 of the Digest, regarding "Limits to the Number of Weeks of Special Benefits Payable". In the period between March 3, 2002 and September, 2006 this section stated:

> Special benefits may be paid in any combination, provided the claimant proves entitlement for each type of benefit, for a maximum total payable of 50 weeks. For example a qualified claimant could receive 5 weeks sickness, 15 weeks maternity and 30 weeks parental benefits, provided she is able to prove entitlement to each type of benefit.

99. Thus, prior to the update that was made in September, 2006, the Commission inaccurately advised claimants of their entitlements under the 2002 amendment. The Digest, as it read prior to September, 2006, plainly instructed potential claimants and claims administrators that parental benefit recipients had no entitlement to a combination of special benefits beyond 50 weeks of benefits.

100. Further, in all sections of the Digest pertinent to sickness leave claims, and at all times during the Class Period, the Digest erroneously instructed potential claimants that they must always prove, on each day of their sickness leave, an "availability for work", wholly ignoring the impact of the 2002 amendment.

101. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert EI claimants that they could make a valid sickness leave claim while on a parental leave.

102. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert Commission employees, staff, and agents, that they must accept a sickness leave claim made by a claimant who is on a parental leave.

(4) Consistent Rejection of Maternity-Parental-Sickness Claims

103. Following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, front-line Commission employees, agents, and representatives began denying all sickness leave claims made by claimants while on a maternity or parental leave.

104. In many cases, these denials would follow the confused verbal and written advice to claimants made by inadequately trained front-line staff. In some circumstances, Class Members were told outright at the beginning of the process that the defendants took the position they had no entitlement to benefits. In others, Class Members were initially instructed by Commission agents to either wait until the expiry of their parental leave claim before applying, or alternatively, to ensure the apply prior to their expiry of parental benefits.

105. When claimants did make claims, these confusions were resolved by "elevating" claims to more senior representatives of the Commission. The result of elevated claims was unanimous. Higher-ranking Commission employees arrived at a single, incorrect resolution to all 2002 amendment claims made by maternity or parental claim recipients: these claimants could not claim sickness benefits due to not meeting the availability requirements set out in s.18 of the EI Act.

(5) Aggressive Approach to Claimant Appeals

106. In all cases where Class Members who were affected by a denial as set out above appealed the Commission's decision denying a sickness leave claim, the Commission fought vigorously against any claim of entitlement to sickness leave benefits by claimants during a maternity or parental leave.

107. A system of appeals is set out in Part VI of the EI Act, upon which the plaintiffs plead and rely. This system includes a first-stage appeal at the Board of Referees, and provides any party a further right of appeal to an Umpire.

108. Almost invariably, claimants who appear before the EI appeals system do not have legal representation and are not legally trained. Further, due to the tremendous value placed on expediency within the first stage of the EI Appeals process, claimants have extremely limited amounts of time to compile an evidentiary record from the date they receive a decision to the scheduling of a hearing date. In the case of combined maternity-parental-sickness claimants, those seeking to appeal the Commission's decision would also invariably be caring for newborn children and would be recovering from or battling an injury, illness, or disability.

109. While these claimants were at a considerable disadvantage vis-à-vis the Commission in the appeals process, the defendants expended considerable resources in defending all appeals made in respect of combined maternity-parental-sickness claims made under the 2002 amendment. In those cases where claimants were successful at the first stage of appeal, the Commission would invariably appeal to the Umpire. At the Umpire stage, claimants would be forced to again defend the record put before the Board of Referees. And again, claimants would typically be at a disadvantage in regards to resources and legal representation.

110. Further, throughout the Class Period, the Commission acted both as the party which had rejected the Class Members' claims and as the litigant prosecuting appeals to the Board of Referees and the Umpire. Throughout the Class Period, the Commission controlled the materials presented to the Board of Referees as well as the submissions made to the Board. During the Class Period, the defendants never once presented the Board or an Umpire materials setting out the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

111. This strategy resulted in the dismal failure of a long series of maternity-parental-sickness benefit claimants who had their claims dismissed, primarily on the ground that they were unable to demonstrate 'availability for work'.

NATALYA ROUGAS OBTAINS SICKNESS LEAVE BENEFITS

112. Rougas became, in 2011, the first person to unequivocally obtain the sickness leave benefits promised by Parliament in the 2002 amendment.

113. Rougas obtained these sickness leave benefits over a year and half after first applying for them.

114. Rougas, like the plaintiffs, was an eligible employment insurance claimant, gave birth to a child, and took a maternity and parental leave from her employment, all while caring for herself or her child.

115. Towards the end of her parental leave period, in January 2010, Rougas was diagnosed with breast cancer.

116. Rougas had to undergo significant treatment for this illness and as a result was unable to return to work.

117. Towards the end of her parental leave, on or about January 16, 2010, Rougas applied for sickness leave benefits.

118. At the time she applied, Rougas was incorrectly advised orally over the telephone by the defendants that her application for sickness leave benefits would not be permitted under the EI Act but that it would be accepted if she applied after the end of her parental leave period. Rougas applied for sickness leave benefits anyway notwithstanding these two misrepresentations.

119. On or about February 22, 2010, Rougas' parental leave claim was rejected by letter because she "[could] not prove that if [she] were not sick [she] would be working because [she] was on parental leave with an expected return to work date of February 1, 2010".

120. On or about March 8, 2010, Rougas appealed this decision to a Board of Referees.

121. On May 11, 2010 Rougas appeared at the appeal without counsel and with her husband, Stavros Rougas. Rougas' appeal was dismissed on that same day.

122. On July 7, 2010, Rougas appealed the Board of Referees decision to an Umpire established under the EI Act.

123. Rougas expended considerable amounts as disbursements given her financial constraints to pursue her appeal. A large part of these were to cover the cost of an access to information search that yielded the key legislative history materials concerning the purpose of the 2002 amendment.

124. The Umpire who wrote the Rougas Decision admitted these legislative history materials into evidence and relied extensively on them in support of the Rougas Decision.

125. The defendants, before and during the hearing of Rougas' appeal, argued that these legislative history materials ought not to be admitted into evidence.

126. The plaintiffs plead that the Rougas Decision conclusively determines that, since the 2002 amendment, all Class Members who made a sickness benefits claim were eligible for sickness benefits.

127. Further, or in the alternative, the plaintiffs plead that the Rougas

Decision conclusively determines that, since the 2002 amendment, all Class Members who were advised by the defendants that they could not make a sickness benefits claim because they were on parental leave or not otherwise available for work, ought not to have been so advised.

No Judicial Review of the Rougas Decision

128. The defendants had a right under the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7 to seek judicial review of the Rougas Decision to the Federal Court of Appeal.

129. On or about August 17, 2011 , the defendants announced that they were not seeking judicial review of the Rougas Decision.

130. In so doing, the defendants, in a prepared written statement read by a spokesperson for the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada, stated that "[i]n regards to Ms. Rougas' case, it was indeed unfortunate and as a government we are committed to maintaining fairness...".

131. Notwithstanding the Rougas Decision and its confirmation that the 2002 amendment provides for the payment of sickness benefits to Class Members, including the plaintiffs and Rougas, the aforesaid spokeswoman of the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada misrepresented in the same written statement that "[t]he changes required [as a result of the Rougas Decision] are legislative".

132. The plaintiffs plead that no legislative changes are required and that, since the 2002 amendment, the necessary legislative provisions have been in place to permit all Class Members to obtain sickness leave benefits.

The Rougas Decision is Not Being Implemented

133. Despite the Rougas Decision and the defendants' decision not to seek judicial review from it, the Rougas Decision is not being implemented.

134. In particular, the Commission denied McCrea's and Kasbohm's sickness leave application on the very grounds that were rejected in the Rougas Decision, namely, that at the time they applied for sickness leave benefits, the plaintiffs were not otherwise available for work.

CAUSES OF ACTION

Misfeasance in Public Office

135. As described above, the defendants engaged in a deliberate effort to implement the 2002 amendment in a manner not in accordance with the purpose, effect, and text of the EI Act and other applicable sources of law, causing foreseeable damage to the Class Members.

136. The defendants implemented the 2002 amendment within its public role as the administrator of Employment Insurance benefits. The defendants' agents undertook to operationalize the 2002 amendment within their role as public officials and as employees of the defendants.

137. The defendants, and specifically their agents with responsibilities in respect of legislative policy, had intimate knowledge of the intent and scope of the 2002 amendment as a result of their central role in proposing and drafting the legislation.

138. At some point shortly following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, agents of the defendants in possession of this information pursued a 2002 amendment implementation program which they knew was unlawful and did not properly encompass the scope of the 2002 amendment.

139. Agents of the defendants responsible for this misfeasance following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment were:

a) the persons, department or branch responsible for legislative policy who provided knowingly false information to the Commission and the public at large in respect of the 2002 amendment following its coming into force;

b) the persons, department or branch responsible for creating the legislative training program under which the defendants' employees were provided with misleading information regarding the operation of the 2002 amendment;

c) the persons, department or branch tasked with overseeing, drafting, and implementing the Employment Insurance website, and specifically, those who requested and implemented the removal and/or publication of information that obscured the effect of the 2002 amendment; and,

d) The persons, department or branch responsible for developing the Commission's response to Class Members' inquiries and appeals of claims that the defendants had knowledge were allowable under the 2002 amendment.

140. At all times, the defendants knew, or ought to have known, that their misapplication of the EI Act would cause damages to the Class Members. It was an obvious result of these actions that certain Class Members who would otherwise have entitlement to benefits would be denied, causing both special and general damages.

141. As a result of the defendants' misfeasance, the Class Members did suffer special and general damages as detailed below.

General Duty of Care, Negligence, and Negligent Implementation of the Statutory Scheme

142. At all times during the Class Period, the defendants owed a duty of care to Class Members that was breached by its negligent conduct in respect of administering the Employment Insurance scheme, and in particular the 2002 amendment.

143. It was foreseeable that negligently implementing an income compensation scheme would cause the Class Members to suffer damages in relation to the loss of their entitlements, as well as the time, frustration and emotional upset associated with the pursuit of improperly denied claims.

144. The Class Members were in a relationship of proximity to the defendants. They had entered into a special relationship with the defendants as a result of their previous engagement in the claims process managed by the defendants in its statutory role as the administrator of Employment Insurance benefits.

145. The defendants communicated directly, specifically, and repeatedly with each Class Member in respect of their maternity, parental, and sickness leave claims. The defendants had already approved, in the case of all Class Members, their valid maternity and parental leave claims.

146. Further, all Class Members were in a position of reliance upon the Commission to administer their benefit claims with reasonable diligence, as all members of the Class were persons in the vulnerable position of having to simultaneously care for one or more young children while also coping with an injury, illness, or disability.

147. The defendants breached the duty of care owed to the Class to properly ascertain the scope of its statutory authority and implement the Employment Insurance program with reasonable diligence. Particulars of the defendants' negligence include the failures pleaded above, and also include:

a) The defendants' post-March 3, 2002 fostering of a description of the EI Act that recklessly or willfully disregarded the defendants' own knowledge of the intent of the 2002 amendment;

b) The defendants' implementation of a "legislative training" regime for its employees which contained inaccurate representations of the effect of the EI Act and the 2002 amendment specifically;

c) The defendants' failure throughout the Class Period to properly train its front-line staff, such that the plaintiffs and Class Members were subject to changing, inconsistent, contradictory and ultimately incorrect advice from agents of the defendants regarding their entitlement to benefits;

d) The defendants' negligent maintenance of its publically available Employment Insurance website, such that throughout the Class Period the website contained misleading, contradictory and incorrect statements regarding the 2002 amendment;

e) The defendants' negligent failure to update its key document, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles, in a timely manner to reflect the coming-into-force of the 2002 amendment;

f) The defendants' failure, when the Digest was updated, to properly describe the effect of the amendment, and to retain misleading and inaccurate descriptions of the relevant entitlement principles; and,

g) The defendants' aggressive approach to denying sickness leave claims by Class Members and then representing itself on appeals to the Board of Referees and Umpire to successfully oppose such appeals.

148. The plaintiffs have suffered damages, detailed below, as a result of this negligent conduct.

Negligent Misstatement and Detrimental Reliance

149. The plaintiffs and Class Members relied to their detriment upon the negligent representations of the defendants.

150. The defendants engaged in a course of communications with each Class Member. These included:

a) Verbal representations during in-person meetings with agents of the defendants at physical Service Canada kiosk locations;

b) Verbal representations to Class Members made over the telephone by Service Canada agents;

c) Written representations in formal correspondence delivered to the Class Members in respect of their claims; and,

d) Written advisements in the form of communications tools to which the Class Members were referred, such as the defendants' website, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles and the EI Jurisprudence Library.

151. The negligent representations of the defendants were consistent and included at least one or any combination of the following:

a) that Class Members had no entitlement to sickness benefits as they had not proven they were available for work during the period of a maternity or parental leave;

b) that an expanded benefit period under s.10(13) of the EI Act could only be accessed by claimants who claimed for sickness benefits before or after a maternity leave;

c) that an expanded benefit period under s.10(13) of the EI Act could only be accessed by claimants who claimed for sickness benefits before or after a maternity or parental leave; and,

d) that sickness benefits could be obtainable by making a fresh claim following a parental leave.

152. In making these consistent and inaccurate statements to the Class Members, the defendants ought reasonably to have foreseen that these Class Members would rely upon the misrepresentations as accurate.

Reliance by the Class Members was reasonable in the circumstances. The defendants therefore owed them a duty of care.

153. The defendants breached the duty of care owed to the Class Members by making these representations negligently, carelessly, or wilfully and recklessly, given their role in proposing and drafting the 2002 amendment, their general expertise and knowledge regarding the operation of the EI Act and its legislative history, and their statutory mandate as the relevant governmental authority in respect of EI benefit entitlement.

154. The Class Members relied on these representations to their detriment. This detrimental reliance included:

a) foregoing sickness benefit claims they would have been entitled to but for the representations of the Commission; and,

b) making fresh sickness benefit claims following the exhaustion of their parental leave that were subsequently legitimately denied by the Commission.

155. The Class Members have suffered losses as described below as a result of this detrimental reliance.

Unjust Enrichment

156. The plaintiffs plead that the defendants, as a result of their conduct, have been unjustly enriched in the amount of benefits improperly denied to the Class Members.

157. The Class Members are all persons who have worked in Canada and paid sufficient employment insurance premiums over many years, and specifically, paid sufficient premiums during the Class Period to qualify as a "major attachment claimant" as defined by the EI Act.

158. During the Class Period, Employment Insurance premiums were collected from, and on behalf of, the Class Members as a regulatory charge at a rate sufficient to ensure the Employment Insurance Account (or the "Employment Insurance Operating Account" after January 1, 2009) was able to pay the benefit amounts authorized to be charged to it.

159. Amounts authorized to be charged to the account included sickness benefit payments to which the Class Members were entitled, but were, as outlined above, systematically excluded from as a result of the defendants' conduct.

160. The defendants wrongfully failed to pay the Class Members the benefits to which they were entitled, and were therefore enriched in the amount of benefits that Class Members were entitled to, but did not, receive.

161. Class Members suffered a deprivation. This deprivation included, but was not limited to:

a) the quantum of improperly denied sickness benefits they applied for; or,

b) the quantum of sickness benefits they were improperly advised not to apply for which they were entitled to.

162. There is not a single juristic reason why the defendants, having simultaneously engaged in a wrongful claim prevention campaign against the Class Members, while receiving EI premiums intended to compensate for those benefits, should retain the surplus amounts so collected.

THE PLAINTIFFS AND THE CLASS MEMBERS SUFFERED DAMAGES

163. The plaintiffs claim for damages in the monetary amount they have lost in either improperly denied sickness benefits, or the amount of sickness benefits foregone or abandoned as a result of the defendants' wrongful intervention in the claims process as described above. This category of damages includes, but is not limited to:

a) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, improperly denied by the Commission, and not pursued through the EI appeals process;

b) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, denied by the Commission, and pursued unsuccessfully through the EI appeals process;

c) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims which were made unsuccessfully by Class Members following a parental leave; and,

d) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims never submitted by Class Members due to the negligent and/or wrongful advisements of the Commission that they had no entitlement to such benefits.

164. Further, the plaintiffs claim general damages for inconvenience, loss of time, frustration, anxiety, mental distress and emotional upset related to the pursuit and denial of wrongfully denied claims by Class

Members.

RELEVANT LEGISLATION

165. The plaintiffs plead and rely upon the EI Act, the Regulations to the EI Act, the Canada Labour Code R.S.C. 1985 c. L-2, the Employment Standards Act, 2000, S.O. 2000, c. 41, the Employment Standards Code, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-9, an Act Respecting Labour Standards, R.S.Q., c. N-1.1, all other Canadian provincial legislation in respect of employment standards, the Rules, the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34, the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11, the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-15, and the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50.

(c) a declaration that the defendants were unjustly enriched by these actions, as particularized below, to the detriment of the plaintiffs and Class Members, and that there exists no juridical reason to allow the defendants to retain the amounts by which they were unjustly enriched;

(d) special damages and general damages for negligence, misfeasance, or unjust enrichment in the amount of $450,000,000.00 or such other sums as this court finds appropriate at the trial of the common issues or at a reference or references under the Rules;

(e) prejudgment interest on the amount set out in paragraph 2(d) at the rate of five per cent per annum pursuant to the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-15, or at a rate to be established by this Honourable Court pursuant to the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50;

(f) postjudgment interest on the amount set out in paragraph 2(d);

(g) an order directing a reference or giving such other directions as may be necessary to determine issues not determined at the trial of the common issues;

(h) costs of this action plus the costs of the distribution of any award under the Rules, including the costs of notice associated with this distribution and the fees to a person administering the distribution pursuant to Rule 334.28 of the Rules; and,

(i) such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court seems just.

THE NATURE OF THE ACTION

3. This action concerns the defendants' failure, during the Class Period, to implement the 2002 amendment.

4. The 2002 amendment provides that all persons eligible to collect employment insurance benefits under the EI Act who suffered from an illness, injury, or disability before or during their parental leave, could then collect up to fifteen (15) weeks of sickness leave benefits.

5. Instead of implementing the 2002 amendment, the Commission – on or shortly after March 3, 2002 – implemented a far more modest change to the detriment of the Class. In particular, the Commission at all times during the Class Period implemented the 2002 amendment as if it was designed merely to provide sickness leave benefits to women for a period of illness, injury, or disability suffered while pregnant and before the commencement of any parental leave.

6. Further, the plaintiffs pleads that – shortly after the 2002 amendment – the defendants took active steps to defeat any chance that anyone, including the plaintiffs and Class Members, would ever be able to successfully obtain a sickness leave benefit for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave, and despite the provisions of the 2002 amendment.

7. Until the Rougas Decision was released, as particularized below, nobody, including the plaintiffs and Class Members, had ever apparently received from the Commission a sickness leave benefit for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave.

8. The defendants have refused to implement the Rougas Decision. The ~~plaintiffs'~~ plaintiff's application~~s~~ for sickness benefits during a parental leave period ~~were~~ was rejected after the Rougas Decision was released and the defendants had determined not to seek judicial review therefrom.

THE PARTIES

Jennifer McCrea

9. McCrea resides in the City of Calgary. During the Class Period, McCrea gave birth to a child, applied for and was in receipt of parental leave benefits, suffered from an illness, injury, or disability during the course of her parental leave, and applied for sickness leave benefits.

10. McCrea's application for sickness leave benefits was denied because she was on parental leave or not otherwise available to work at the time of her sickness leave application.

11. On October 15, 2010, prior to the birth of her child, McCrea was informed by her family doctor that she was suffering from high blood pressure. She was advised to cease working immediately.

12. McCrea informed her employer of her health status and took a flexible leave from her employment as an Office Manager with Safe Self Storage Inc., a Calgary area storage company. Her employer advised her that she was welcome to return at any point during her leave.

13. McCrea also made an application for employment insurance sickness benefits. As she was expecting the birth of her child within the weeks subsequent to her initial claim, a Service Canada representative advised her that she would be placed directly on maternity benefits as opposed to sickness benefits.

14. McCrea gave birth to Logan McCrea on October 31, 2010 and spent several months spending time with and caring for this child.

15. McCrea was found eligible for fifty (50) weeks of combined maternity and parental benefits inside of a benefit period that was scheduled to extinguish on October 20, 2011.

16. On May 9, 2011, McCrea had an MRI performed. McCrea suffers from an uncommon genetic mutation which greatly increases her risk of developing breast cancer. As such, she has been closely monitored for symptoms of the disease.

17. The results of the MRI were abnormal, and on July 9, 2011 she underwent an MRI-guided biopsy.

18. McCrea was diagnosed with breast cancer on July 18, 2011.

19. On July 29, 2011 McCrea met with a surgical specialist. Given McCrea's medical history, the surgeon recommended a bilateral mastectomy. Surgery was scheduled for August 11, 2011.

20. McCrea's physicians were initially of the opinion that she would require at least three (3) weeks of recovery time from the date of the surgery.

21. On August 2, 2011, McCrea contacted a Service Canada office by phone and spoke with a Commission agent regarding how to go about making a claim for sickness leave. She requested a conversion of her parental leave to sickness leave beginning August 11, 2011.

22. McCrea was advised by the Commission at that time that if the sickness leave claim was successful, her parental leave benefits would be temporarily suspended and sickness leave benefits would be paid during her period of recovery from surgery.

23. McCrea underwent a bilateral mastectomy on August 11, 2011. Following surgery, McCrea became incapacitated. In particular, she was unable to lift her arms and movement was difficult and painful. McCrea also underwent a period of recovery from the emotional trauma commonly associated with the bilateral mastectomy procedure.

24. During this period after the surgery, McCrea was unable to work or do any of the household tasks required to care for her two young children. McCrea's husband and mother completely took over the child care duties while she recovered.

25. On August 19, 2011, McCrea saw her doctor for a post-operative follow up. Her doctor determined that she required additional weeks of recuperation, until at least September 26, 2011. McCrea's treating physician wrote a letter to Service Canada indicating she would remain incapacitated during this period.

26. McCrea provided this updated information in-person at a Service Canada office. During this visit to the Service Canada office, she inquired about the status of her benefits. She was told by a Commission agent to phone the central Service Canada hotline during the following week.

27. On August 30, 2011, after making repeated attempts to contact the hotline and receive an update, McCrea received a phone call from a Service Canada worker inquiring about her work availability.

28. On September 19, 2011, McCrea was advised for the first time by the Commission that they took the position she was ineligible for sickness benefits.

29. McCrea was told over the phone, and later in writing, that as she had indicated that she was on a parental leave and had not proven that she would be available for work if she was not sick, she was not eligible for sickness benefits. The Commission thus denied McCrea's claim for sickness benefits in its entirety.

Carissa Kasbohm

30. Kasbohm, formerly a Plaintiff in the within action, resides in the City of Calgary. During the Class Period, Kasbohm gave birth to a child, applied for and was in receipt of parental leave benefits, suffered from an illness, injury or disability during the course of her parental leave and applied for sickness leave benefits.

31. Kasbohm's application for sickness leave was denied because she was on parental leave or not otherwise available to work at the time of her sickness leave application.

32. Throughout the latter stages of her pregnancy, Kasbohm experienced severe fatigue, nausea and body bruising. On October 1, 2010, Kasbohm was forced to cease working as a chef at a popular Calgary restaurant due to these symptoms. Her employer advised her that she was welcome to return at any time following her recovery and at any point during her anticipated maternity and parental leave.

33. On October 14, 2010, during a maternity check up, she was diagnosed with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura ("TTP"), a rare and serious blood disorder. Kasbohm was immediately admitted to hospital.

34. On October 16, 2010, Kasbohm gave birth to her first son, Castiel Kasbohm.

35. On or around October 31, 2010, she applied for and was found eligible for fifty (50) weeks of combined maternity and parental benefits in respect of the birth of Castiel Kasbohm.

36. From October 2010 through January 2011, Kasbohm underwent treatment in respect of her TTP diagnosis. This included, but was not limited to, blood transfusions, chemotherapy-like pharmacological interventions, and twenty-nine (29) rounds of plasmapheresis, in which the patient's blood plasma is replaced with donor plasma.

37. During this period of time, she was completely disabled and unable to work or care for her child. Care for Castiel Kasbohm was provided by her husband, mother and grandmother.

38. In December, 2010 Kasbohm was advised by Hospital staff that she should apply to convert her EI maternity and parental leave benefits to EI sickness leave benefits.

39. Kasbohm attempted to do so at or around this time, and was told over the phone by a Commission agent that she was ineligible for sickness benefits due to her being in receipt of maternity benefits. She was informed by the Commission at that time that she would be eligible for sickness benefits at the end of her claim as long as she applied prior to the exhaustion of her parental leave benefits.

40. In September 2011, Kasbohm was advised by her physicians that she would be medically unable to return to work following the end of her parental leave. She again applied for EI sickness benefits and provided the Commission with medical documentation which indicated that she was incapacitated.

41. More particularly, Kasbohm applied for sickness leave during a period in which she was still receiving parental leave benefits.

42. Throughout October, 2011, Kasbohm attempted to contact Service Canada to inquire about the status of her sickness benefits claim. On November 9, 2011 Kasbohm was contacted by the Commission and informed that it appeared she would not be eligible for benefits.

43. Kasbohm subsequently received correspondence from the Commission on or about November 10, 2011 indicating that she had been ruled ineligible for sickness benefits as she was not "otherwise available for work".

44. Kasbohm's disease has gone into temporary remission. However, she fatigues rapidly and gets sick easily in whole or in part because she took a course of medication which will act as an immuno-suppressant for years to come. She was unable to return to work following the expiration of her maternity and parental leave, and remains without income of any kind.

The Commission

45. During the Class Period, the Commission was responsible for administering, interpreting, and enforcing the EI Act correctly whenever a claimant applied for employment insurance benefits, including parental leave and sickness leave benefits.

46. During the Class Period, the Commission was an agent of the defendant Attorney General, or more particularly, an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada pursuant to the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34 and the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11.

47. During the Class Period, all officers and employees of the Commission were employed by HRSDC.

HISTORY OF THE 2002 AMENDMENT

The History of the EI Act

48. The federal government has administered an employment insurance scheme since the early 1940s. Its purpose initially had been to provide temporary income replacement to workers facing involuntary unemployment. As the next paragraphs demonstrate, the purpose of EI changed over time to incorporate new social norms and thinking, and the EI Act is now widely regarded as a form of "social" insurance designed to provided economic support during periods of temporary interruptions of employment.

49. In the early 1970s, EI was expanded to reflect changing norms in the Canadian labour market, including the increased presence of women into the workforce. This era of reform included the introduction of "special benefits" that provided income replacement for workers unable to work due to sickness or pregnancy.

50. In the 1980s, the EI Act was further expanded to recognize periods of unemployment taken by parents to care for their adoptive or natural born children, defined in paragraph 1 as "parental leave".

Parental leave has always been classified as a "special benefit", like sickness and maternity leave.

51. In 1990, the federal government enhanced the EI Act's special benefit provisions by allowing claimants to combine their maternity, parental, and sickness benefits up to a certain amount of weeks. The "bundling" of special benefit entitlements was subject to a strict cap on the maximum amount of benefit weeks allowed. Under the 1996 version of the EI Act, for instance, this cap was set at thirty (30) weeks.

52. By 2001, the amount of parental benefits available to claimants was increased from 10 to 35 weeks in order to enable parents to spend more time at home during their child's early period of life. Following the introduction of enhanced parental leave benefits in the 2000 federal budget, s.12(5) of the EI Act was amended to provide for a 50 week bundling of special benefits cap.

The McAllister-Windsor Decision

53. On March 9, 2001, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal issued the McAllister-Windsor decision. The complainant in that case challenged the prohibition on stacking special benefits beyond the then 30-week legislated cap. After the cap was extended to 50 weeks, the challenge incorporated a challenge to that cap as well. The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal found that the operation of the provision had an exclusive adverse effect on women and disabled claimants, as only those claimants who sought to combine their full entitlements to 15 weeks of maternity leave, 35 weeks of parental leave, and 15 weeks sickness leave benefits, would be subject to a cap limiting the benefits to 50 combined weeks.

54. As a result of the decision, HRDC ("HRDC", as it was stylized prior to 2003) was ordered by the Tribunal to cease applying the provisions of the EI Act in a discriminatory manner.

The Response of HRDC to McAllister-Windsor

55. HRDC considered several options in respect of how the department would respond to the ruling. Following the release of the decision, the Ministers of HRDC and Finance were informed by Departmental staff that the government had until March 3, 2002 to come into compliance with the Human Rights Tribunal directive.

56. By November 30, 2001, HRDC had drafted a proposal calling for an amendment to the EI Act. The amendment was intended to provide an extension of the 50-week cap on benefits by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy and "during a parental benefit claim", thereby ensuring the EI Act did not discriminate against any claimant on the basis of gender or disability.

57. The HRDC proposal was approved. An amendment to the EI Act intended to implement the proposal was included in changes to the EI program announced in relation to the December 10, 2001 Federal budget. It is this amendment that became the 2002 amendment defined above.

58. HRDC staff prepared a set of question-and-answer statements for their Minister's use in discussing the proposed change. In these statements, it was consistently indicated that the 2002 amendment was intended to provide an exception to the 50 week cap for special benefits by extending it by one week for each week of sickness benefits taken by biological mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental leave claim.

59. HRDC advised the Minister to inform the media and relevant stakeholders that the amendment was needed because, "[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits".

Bill C-49 [the 2002 amendment]

60. In 2001, the Government introduced Bill C-49, the Budget Implementation Act, 2001. Included in Part 3 of the legislation were improvements to the EI Act. These improvements included the new provisions designed to ensure that claimants who qualified for maternity, parental and sickness benefits would be provided with an expanded benefit period of up to sixty-five (65) weeks. It is this that constitutes the 2002 amendment.

61. The plaintiffs ~~plead~~ pleas and ~~rely~~ relies on the official statements of all representatives of the Government who spoke to the Bill in the House of Commons, Senate, and in Parliamentary committees. Without exception, these statements confirmed that the government's intent was to directly implement HRDC's proposed response to the McAllister-Windsor directive and decision. Every government representative that spoke to this portion of the Bill indicated that the 2002 amendment would ensure that the cap on special benefits would be extended for each week of sickness leave taken by a mother during their pregnancy or during their parental leave.

62. Further to paragraph 61, the plaintiffs ~~plead~~ pleas and ~~rely~~ relies more particularly on the following the statements:

(a) The statements contained in the November 30, 2001 "EI Court Challenges" briefing document prepared for the Minister of Finance, and in particular the statement indicating the HRDC proposal would "[e]xtend the 50-week cap on benefits for women by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy, and during a parental benefits claim.";

(b) The statements contained in the 2002 document prepared for the Minister of HRDC titled "Briefing Note: Program Amendments Included in Budget Implementation Bill", and in particular the statements indicating that the 50 week cap to special benefits in the EI Act would "be extended by one week of sickness benefits up to 65 weeks when paid to biological to mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental benefit claim" (sic) and that the amendment was needed because "[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits";

(c) The statements contained in a document entitled "Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: Why Making Changes" produced for the Minister of HRDC, indicating the change was made to benefit mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits [who] may be unable to claim all of their special benefits";

(d) The statements contained in a document entitled "Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: More Benefits to Biological Mothers", indicating the Bill C-49 change would mean "the total number of weeks of special benefits a claimant could receive would be extended by a limited number of weeks for biological mothers when they use sickness benefits during pregnancy or during a parental benefit claim.";

(e) The February 6, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum, made to the House of Commons, that Bill C-49 "increases [the EI Act benefits] ceiling by one week for each week of sick leave taken by a mother during her pregnancy or while she is receiving parental benefits, so that she may benefit fully from the special benefits.";

(f) The February 20, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum to the Standing Committee on Finance that "Bill C-49 further improves the delivery of parental benefits under EI [...] To enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, effective March 3, 2002 this cap will increase by one week for each week of sickness benefits she takes while pregnant or while receiving parental benefits.";

(g) The March 19, 2002 statement of the Hon. Anne C. Cools, made to the Senate in respect of the C-49 changes to the EI Act, that "to enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, [the legislative] cap increases by one week for each week of sickness benefits she take while pregnant or receiving parental benefits."; and,

(h) The statement contained in a backgrounder published on the Employment Insurance Commission's website following the coming into force of Bill C-49 that indicated the change was in respect of those mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits".

THE RESPONSE OF THE EI COMMISSION TO THE 2002 AMENDMENT

63. The Commission and the defendants did not adopt the 2002 amendment following its coming into force. In particular, the change described in the proposal which they had drafted for the relevant Ministers and which was now set out in the 2002 amendment was simply not implemented.

64. The defendants' actions during this time laid the foundation upon which the Commission would, throughout the Class Period, wrongly and tortiously administer the EI program and incorrectly and tortiously advise the Class Members regarding their entitlement to sickness benefits.

65. In the months that followed the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission took active steps to ensure the 2002 amendment would not be implemented. In particular, the Commission did not describe the 2002 amendment as being designed to benefit parental benefit recipients who suffered from an illness, injury or disability during their parental leave.

66. Instead, the Commission implemented narrow aspects of the 2002 amendment in such a way as to defeat all sickness leave claims by the Class Members. In particular, the Commission incorrectly adopted "availability to work" criteria to 2002 amendment claims such that no claimant who made a sickness leave claim while on a parental leave would be deemed by the Commission to be sufficiently "available for work" and, thus, no claimant would ever qualify for sickness benefits. This implementation ignored the clear wording of the very proposal the Commission and HRDC had drafted and submitted to the relevant Ministers, and which had subsequently been passed by as the 2002 amendment by Parliament.

67. The Commission's revised position regarding the scope of the 2002 amendment was confused and inconsistent, but for the most part the position misrepresented entirely the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

68. The defendants' internal and external communications during the Class Period at times described the 2002 amendment as providing sickness leave benefits to women "before or after" the commencement of a maternity leave, while other public communications assured claimants that benefits would be available "before or after" a maternity or parental leave.

69. In addition to denying claimants who sought sickness leave benefits during their maternity or parental leave periods, the latter "before or after maternity or parental leave" explanation of the change incorrectly purported to make benefits available to claimants who file a claim "after" a parental leave. In fact, a sickness leave claim filed by a claimant after their parental leave was impossible to make, as all eligible claimants seeking to file a new claim after their parental leave claim had been exhausted would be rejected. In practice, these claimants would find that their original parental claim would be expired, and that they lacked sufficient qualifying hours to make a valid fresh claim. Thus, a sickness leave claim submitted following a parental leave claim could not succeed, the Commission's representations notwithstanding.

70. Further to this misrepresentation, the "before or after" explanation of the effect of the change was an entirely inaccurate reflection of the Commission's own understanding of the 2002 amendment, as is reflected in the materials the Commission produced in proposing the change and the Hansard statements of the parliamentarians responsible for the Bill pleaded above. These materials, without exception, expressly indicated the change was being made in respect of sickness benefit claims made before or during a parental leave claim only. At no point in any of the documents drafted by the Commission prior to the passage of the 2002 amendment was there any indication that the change was intended to provide sickness benefits "after" a parental leave claim.

71. The defendants' tortious implementation of the 2002 amendment included, but was not limited to, the following activities:

(1) "Legislative Training" of Commission Employees

72. In the months following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission undertook an extensive, country-wide "legislative training" program for Commission employees in respect of the 2002 amendment.

73. Participants in this training were provided with materials and instructions regarding the effect of the 2002 amendment. These materials again reflected that benefits might be available for claimants "before or after" a parental leave, which was not in accordance with the Commission's clear understanding of the amendment as providing for benefits before or during a parental leave claim. Participants to the legislative training were at no point advised that parental leave claimants could make sickness claims while on their parental leave, or that claimants who sought to make a new claim "after" their leave might be disqualified on qualifying-hours grounds.

74. Further, during the course of this training, the Commission did not advise those being trained to cease applying and interpreting the EI Act so as to require that all sickness leave claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness leave period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave.

75. Given the knowledge held by HRDC agents regarding the content of the 2002 amendment, this training was provided either recklessly or in bad faith.

76. The inadequacy of the training provided to Commission Employees was exacerbated by the fact that, in all written materials such employees would have available to them to review a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave, those materials inaccurately set out or actively defeated the 2002 amendment. Particulars of some of these materials are set out below.

77. In addition to those materials, the Commission failed to create an accurate jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, or alternatively failed to update its existing jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, to reflect the presence of the 2002 amendment. The failures included maintaining cases and digests of sickness leave cases which indicated that, for all sickness leave claimants, the claimant must demonstrate an "availability" to work on each and every day of their sickness leave claim.

(2) Improper Updating of the Employment Insurance Website

78. At all times during the Class Period, HRDC and HRSDC maintained an Employment Insurance website currently located on the Internet, or world wide web at the URL http://www.servicecanada.gc.ca/eng/sc/ei/index.shtml.

79. The Employment Insurance website allowed claimants to submit and request information regarding EI claims, and provided those seeking EI benefits with advice and information about the program, its history, the operation of the EI Act, and the eligibility of claimants in various scenarios to obtain EI benefits. During the Class Period, claimants were routinely referred to the website by Commission agents. The website was portrayed by the defendants as a trustworthy source of information regarding employment insurance.

80. During a brief period shortly after the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the website published some information regarding the 2002 amendment which at points accurately described the effect of the 2002 amendment. On April 10, 2002, the Commission posted a backgrounder under the website's "What's New?" section at the URL:

> http://web.archive.org/web/20020402054832/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/menu/budget2001_e.shtml.

This backgrounder characterized the 2002 amendment as affecting biological mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits" and stated the change was meant to ensure "full access to special benefits for these mothers", while indicating the 2002 amendment would allow "full access to special benefits for mothers who claim sickness benefits before or after their maternity claim".

81. This backgrounder was present on the website for approximately 18 months and was removed on or around January, 2004. Following the removal of this language, the website would never again use language indicating a sickness leave claim would be possible while receiving special benefits, including parental leave benefits.

82. On or about July 18, 2002, the Commission updated its website's Frequently Asked Questions ("FAQ") section in respect of "Maternity, parental and sickness benefits". This update, which was present on the website throughout the Class Period, advised claimants that "A combination of maternity, parental and sickness benefits can be received up to a combined maximum of 50 weeks".

83. The website's FAQ document, following the passage of the 2002 amendment and throughout the Class Period, included a proviso for claimants who "received sickness benefits before or after [their] maternity benefits." In this section, the website illustrated that sickness leave benefits would only be available to those claimants who received sickness benefits before their parental benefits commenced. The scenarios set out by the defendants on their website highlighted that claimants seeking a sickness leave benefit following the commencement of parental benefits would be ineligible for further benefits.

84. Further, not one scenario described in the FAQ document on the website set out a situation whereupon an eligible claimant would be entitled to receive sickness leave benefits for an illness, injury, or disability suffered during a parental leave.

85. During the Class Period, the website has consistently provided inaccurate information to those seeking information on the changes introduced by the 2002 amendment. On July 24, 2008, the website published a document which purported to describe the EI Act's "Recent Legislative Context". This document informed the public that, effective March 3, 2002, the 2002 amendment would "ensure access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

86. On October 16, 2009, the website published a similar document indicating that the 2002 amendment changed the maximum number of combined weeks of special benefits from 50 to 65 weeks, and that "these provisions ensure full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits."

87. Visitors to the website during the Class Period, then, would be alternately advised that sickness leave benefits would be available to them if they applied for them prior to or following a maternity claim or prior to or following a maternity or parental claim.

88. No Class Members, and no visitor to the website, would have ever been advised that they would be eligible for sickness leave benefits if a claim was made during a parental leave claim.

89. Further, the plaintiffs pleads that, at all times during the Class Period, the Commission maintained on its website an interpretation of the sickness leave requirement that all sickness leave claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness leave period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave.

90. The plaintiffs pleads, and the fact is, that in addition to the websites and documents set out above but excluding the FAQ document set out earlier, the defendants at all material times in all documentation prepared by the defendants, in printed or electronic format, materially misrepresented the scope of the 2002 amendment. In particular, these material misrepresentations of fact, including by facts stated expressly or by material omission were:

(a) statements that only those making a sickness leave claim before or after a maternity leave or parental leave claim would be eligible to obtain a sickness leave claim; and,

(b) statements that all sickness leave claimants had to demonstrate that, on every day of their sickness leave, they were otherwise available for work, a legal requirement that would always defeat a sickness leave claim made during a parental leave period.

91. In its first monitoring and assessment report drafted by HRDC for its Minister, for instance, which report was drafted shortly after the 2002 amendment was enacted, HRDC wrote that "[e]ffective March 3, 2002, [the 2002 amendment] ensure[s] full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

92. This language, limiting the 2002 amendment to sickness leave claims filed before or after maternity or parental leave periods, was consistently used in each written, electronic, and publically available document produced by the defendants during the Claim Period, including in most of the documents pleaded and relied on with more particularity above and below.

(3) Failure to Update the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles

93. The plaintiffs pleads and ~~rely~~ relies upon the Commission's Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles in effect from time to time during the Class Period. The version published on February 21, 2004 remains available at the URL:

> http://web.archive.org/web/20040221011714/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/loi-law/guide-digest/13_2_0_e.shtml.

94. At all times during the Class Period, the Digest contained and contains the principles applied by the Commission when making decisions on claims for benefits under the EI Act. It is intended as a reference tool for all users, including those without a legal background or knowledge of employment insurance, and including all Class Members.

95. Further, the Digest was one of the primary documents, if not the primary document, made available to the Commission to assist it in implementing the EI Act during the Class Period.

96. While the Digest was revised multiple times following the March 3, 2002 coming into force of the 2002 amendment, language indicating that claimants may have an entitlement to combinations of special benefits beyond 50 weeks did not appear in the Digest until September, 2006. Thus, any claimant referred to the Digest as a source of authoritative information regarding their entitlement to special benefits would remain wholly unaware until September 2006 that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

97. Further, all employees or agents of the Commission charged with the duty of reviewing claims and implementing the EI Act would, on reviewing the Digest until September, 2006, remain wholly unaware that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

98. This lack of updating included, but was not limited to, Chapter 13.2.1 of the Digest, regarding "Limits to the Number of Weeks of Special Benefits Payable". In the period between March 3, 2002 and September, 2006 this section stated:

> Special benefits may be paid in any combination, provided the claimant proves entitlement for each type of benefit, for a maximum total payable of 50 weeks. For example a qualified claimant could receive 5 weeks sickness, 15 weeks maternity and 30 weeks parental benefits, provided she is able to prove entitlement to each type of benefit.

99. Thus, prior to the update that was made in September, 2006, the Commission inaccurately advised claimants of their entitlements under the 2002 amendment. The Digest, as it read prior to September, 2006, plainly instructed potential claimants and claims administrators that parental benefit recipients had no entitlement to a combination of special benefits beyond 50 weeks of benefits.

100. Further, in all sections of the Digest pertinent to sickness leave claims, and at all times during the Class Period, the Digest erroneously instructed potential claimants that they must always prove, on each day of their sickness leave, an "availability for work", wholly ignoring the impact of the 2002 amendment.

101. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert EI claimants that they could make a valid sickness leave claim while on a parental leave.

102. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert Commission employees, staff, and agents, that they must accept a sickness leave claim made by a claimant who is on a parental leave.

(4) Consistent Rejection of Maternity-Parental-Sickness Claims

103. Following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, front-line Commission employees, agents, and representatives began denying all sickness leave claims made by claimants while on a maternity or parental leave.

104. In many cases, these denials would follow the confused verbal and written advice to claimants made by inadequately trained front-line staff. In some circumstances, Class Members were told outright at the beginning of the process that the defendants took the position they had no entitlement to benefits. In others, Class Members were initially instructed by Commission agents to either wait until the expiry of their parental leave claim before applying, or alternatively, to ensure the apply prior to their expiry of parental benefits.

105. When claimants did make claims, these confusions were resolved by "elevating" claims to more senior representatives of the Commission. The result of elevated claims was unanimous. Higher-ranking Commission employees arrived at a single, incorrect resolution to all 2002 amendment claims made by maternity or parental claim recipients: these claimants could not claim sickness benefits due to not meeting the availability requirements set out in s.18 of the EI Act.

(5) Aggressive Approach to Claimant Appeals

106. In all cases where Class Members who were affected by a denial as set out above appealed the Commission's decision denying a sickness leave claim, the Commission fought vigorously against any claim of entitlement to sickness leave benefits by claimants during a maternity or parental leave.

107. A system of appeals is set out in Part VI of the EI Act, upon which the plaintiffs ~~plead~~ plea and rely. This system includes a first-stage appeal at the Board of Referees, and provides any party a further right of appeal to an Umpire.

108. Almost invariably, claimants who appear before the EI appeals system do not have legal representation and are not legally trained. Further, due to the tremendous value placed on expediency within the first stage of the EI Appeals process, claimants have extremely limited amounts of time to compile an evidentiary record from the date they receive a decision to the scheduling of a hearing date. In the case of combined maternity-parental-sickness claimants, those seeking to appeal the Commission's decision would also invariably be caring for newborn children and would be recovering from or battling an injury, illness, or disability.

109. While these claimants were at a considerable disadvantage vis-à-vis the Commission in the appeals process, the defendants expended considerable resources in defending all appeals made in respect of combined maternity-parental-sickness claims made under the 2002 amendment. In those cases where claimants were successful at the first stage of appeal, the Commission would invariably appeal to the Umpire. At the Umpire stage, claimants would be forced to again defend the record put before the Board of Referees. And again, claimants would typically be at a disadvantage in regards to resources and legal representation.

110. Further, throughout the Class Period, the Commission acted both as the party which had rejected the Class Members' claims and as the litigant prosecuting appeals to the Board of Referees and the Umpire. Throughout the Class Period, the Commission controlled the materials presented to the Board of Referees as well as the submissions made to the Board. During the Class Period, the defendants never once presented the Board or an Umpire materials setting out the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

111. This strategy resulted in the dismal failure of a long series of maternity-parental-sickness benefit claimants who had their claims dismissed, primarily on the ground that they were unable to demonstrate 'availability for work'.

NATALYA ROUGAS OBTAINS SICKNESS LEAVE BENEFITS

112. Rougas became, in 2011, the first person to unequivocally obtain the sickness leave benefits promised by Parliament in the 2002 amendment.

113. Rougas obtained these sickness leave benefits over a year and half after first applying for them.

114. Rougas, like the plaintiffs, was an eligible employment insurance claimant, gave birth to a child, and took a maternity and parental leave from her employment, all while caring for herself or her child.

115. Towards the end of her parental leave period, in January 2010, Rougas was diagnosed with breast cancer.

116. Rougas had to undergo significant treatment for this illness and as a result was unable to return to work.

117. Towards the end of her parental leave, on or about January 16, 2010, Rougas applied for sickness leave benefits.

118. At the time she applied, Rougas was incorrectly advised orally over the telephone by the defendants that her application for sickness leave benefits would not be permitted under the EI Act but that it would be accepted if she applied after the end of her parental leave period. Rougas applied for sickness leave benefits anyway notwithstanding these two misrepresentations.

119. On or about February 22, 2010, Rougas' parental leave claim was rejected by letter because she "[could] not prove that if [she] were not sick [she] would be working because [she] was on parental leave with an expected return to work date of February 1, 2010".

120. On or about March 8, 2010, Rougas appealed this decision to a Board of Referees.

121. On May 11, 2010 Rougas appeared at the appeal without counsel and with her husband, Stavros Rougas. Rougas' appeal was dismissed on that same day.

122. On July 7, 2010, Rougas appealed the Board of Referees decision to an Umpire established under the EI Act.

123. Rougas expended considerable amounts as disbursements given her financial constraints to pursue her appeal. A large part of these were to cover the cost of an access to information search that yielded the key legislative history materials concerning the purpose of the 2002 amendment.

124. The Umpire who wrote the Rougas Decision admitted these legislative history materials into evidence and relied extensively on them in support of the Rougas Decision.

125. The defendants, before and during the hearing of Rougas' appeal, argued that these legislative history materials ought not to be admitted into evidence.

126. The plaintiff~~s~~ pleads that the Rougas Decision conclusively determines that, since the 2002 amendment, all Class Members who made a sickness benefits claim were eligible for sickness benefits.

127. Further, or in the alternative, the plaintiff~~s~~ pleads that the Rougas Decision conclusively determines that, since the 2002 amendment, all Class Members who were advised by the defendants that they could not make a sickness benefits claim because they were on parental leave or not otherwise available for work, ought not to have been so advised.

No Judicial Review of the Rougas Decision

128. The defendants had a right under the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7 to seek judicial review of the Rougas Decision to the Federal Court of Appeal.

129. On or about August 17, 2011 , the defendants announced that they were not seeking judicial review of the Rougas Decision.

130. In so doing, the defendants, in a prepared written statement read by a spokesperson for the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada, stated that "[i]n regards to Ms. Rougas' case, it was indeed unfortunate and as a government we are committed to maintaining fairness...".

131. Notwithstanding the Rougas Decision and its confirmation that the 2002 amendment provides for the payment of sickness benefits to Class Members, including the plaintiff~~s~~ and Rougas, the aforesaid spokeswoman of the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada misrepresented in the same written statement that "[t]he changes required [as a result of the Rougas Decision] are legislative".

132. The plaintiff~~s~~ pleads that no legislative changes are required and that, since the 2002 amendment, the necessary legislative provisions have been in place to permit all Class Members to obtain sickness leave benefits.

The Rougas Decision is Not Being Implemented

133. Despite the Rougas Decision and the defendants' decision not to seek judicial review from it, the Rougas Decision is not being implemented.

134. In particular, the Commission denied McCrea's and Kasbohm's sickness leave application on the very grounds that were rejected in the Rougas Decision, namely, that at the time they applied for sickness leave benefits, the plaintiff~~s~~ ~~were~~ was not otherwise available for work.

CAUSES OF ACTION

Misfeasance in Public Office

135. As described above, the defendants engaged in a deliberate effort to implement the 2002 amendment in a manner not in accordance with the purpose, effect, and text of the EI Act and other applicable sources of law, causing foreseeable damage to the Class Members.

136. The defendants implemented the 2002 amendment within its public role as the administrator of Employment Insurance benefits. The defendants' agents undertook to operationalize the 2002 amendment within their role as public officials and as employees of the defendants.

137. The defendants, and specifically their agents with responsibilities in respect of legislative policy, had intimate knowledge of the intent and scope of the 2002 amendment as a result of their central role in proposing and drafting the legislation.

138. At some point shortly following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, agents of the defendants in possession of this information pursued a 2002 amendment implementation program which they knew was unlawful and did not properly encompass the scope of the 2002 amendment.

139. Agents of the defendants responsible for this misfeasance following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment were:

    (a) the persons, department or branch responsible for legislative policy who provided knowingly false information to the

Commission and the public at large in respect of the 2002 amendment following its coming into force;

(b) the persons, department or branch responsible for creating the legislative training program under which the defendants' employees were provided with misleading information regarding the operation of the 2002 amendment;

(c) the persons, department or branch tasked with overseeing, drafting, and implementing the Employment Insurance website, and specifically, those who requested and implemented the removal and/or publication of information that obscured the effect of the 2002 amendment; and,

(d) The persons, department or branch responsible for developing the Commission's response to Class Members' inquiries and appeals of claims that the defendants had knowledge were allowable under the 2002 amendment.

140. At all times, the defendants knew, or ought to have known, that their misapplication of the EI Act would cause damages to the Class Members. It was an obvious result of these actions that certain Class Members who would otherwise have entitlement to benefits would be denied, causing both special and general damages.

141. As a result of the defendants' misfeasance, the Class Members did suffer special and general damages as detailed below.

General Duty of Care, Negligence, and Negligent Implementation of the Statutory Scheme

142. At all times during the Class Period, the defendants owed a duty of care to Class Members that was breached by its negligent conduct in respect of administering the Employment Insurance scheme, and in particular the 2002 amendment.

143. It was foreseeable that negligently implementing an income compensation scheme would cause the Class Members to suffer damages in relation to the loss of their entitlements, as well as the time, frustration and emotional upset associated with the pursuit of improperly denied claims.

144. The Class Members were in a relationship of proximity to the defendants. They had entered into a special relationship with the defendants as a result of their previous engagement in the claims process managed by the defendants in its statutory role as the administrator of Employment Insurance benefits.

145. The defendants communicated directly, specifically, and repeatedly with each Class Member in respect of their maternity, parental, and sickness leave claims. The defendants had already approved, in the case of all Class Members, their valid maternity and parental leave claims.

146. Further, all Class Members were in a position of reliance upon the Commission to administer their benefit claims with reasonable diligence, as all members of the Class were persons in the vulnerable position of having to simultaneously care for one or more young children while also coping with an injury, illness, or disability.

147. The defendants breached the duty of care owed to the Class to properly ascertain the scope of its statutory authority and implement the Employment Insurance program with reasonable diligence. Particulars of the defendants' negligence include the failures pleaded above, and also include:

(a) The defendants' post-March 3, 2002 fostering of a description of the EI Act that recklessly or willfully disregarded the defendants' own knowledge of the intent of the 2002 amendment;

(b) The defendants' implementation of a "legislative training" regime for its employees which contained inaccurate representations of the effect of the EI Act and the 2002 amendment specifically;

(c) The defendants' failure throughout the Class Period to properly train its front-line staff, such that the plaintiffs and Class Members were subject to changing, inconsistent, contradictory and ultimately incorrect advice from agents of the defendants regarding their entitlement to benefits;

(d) The defendants' negligent maintenance of its publically available Employment Insurance website, such that throughout the Class Period the website contained misleading, contradictory and incorrect statements regarding the 2002 amendment;

(e) The defendants' negligent failure to update its key document, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles, in a timely manner to reflect the coming-into-force of the 2002 amendment;

(f) The defendants' failure, when the Digest was updated, to properly describe the effect of the amendment, and to retain misleading and inaccurate descriptions of the relevant entitlement principles; and,

(g) The defendants' aggressive approach to denying sickness leave claims by Class Members and then representing itself on appeals to the Board of Referees and Umpire to successfully oppose such appeals.

148. The plaintiff~~s~~ ~~have~~ has suffered damages, detailed below, as a result of this negligent conduct.

Negligent Misstatement and Detrimental Reliance

149. The plaintiff~~s~~ and Class Members relied to their detriment upon the negligent representations of the defendants.

150. The defendants engaged in a course of communications with each Class Member. These included:

(a) Verbal representations during in-person meetings with agents of the defendants at physical Service Canada kiosk locations;

(b) Verbal representations to Class Members made over the telephone by Service Canada agents;

(c) Written representations in formal correspondence delivered to the Class Members in respect of their claims; and,

(d) Written advisements in the form of communications tools to which the Class Members were referred, such as the defendants' website, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles and the EI Jurisprudence Library.

151. The negligent representations of the defendants were consistent and included at least one or any combination of the following:

(a) that Class Members had no entitlement to sickness benefits as they had not proven they were available for work during the period of a maternity or parental leave;

(b) that an expanded benefit period under s.10(13) of the EI Act could only be accessed by claimants who claimed for sickness benefits before or after a maternity leave;

(c) that an expanded benefit period under s.10(13) of the EI Act could only be accessed by claimants who claimed for sickness benefits before or after a maternity or parental leave; and,

(d) that sickness benefits could be obtainable by making a fresh claim following a parental leave.

152. In making these consistent and inaccurate statements to the Class Members, the defendants ought reasonably to have foreseen that these Class Members would rely upon the misrepresentations as accurate. Reliance by the Class Members was reasonable in the circumstances. The defendants therefore owed them a duty of care.

153. The defendants breached the duty of care owed to the Class Members by making these representations negligently, carelessly, or wilfully and recklessly, given their role in proposing and drafting the 2002 amendment, their general expertise and knowledge regarding the operation of the EI Act and its legislative history, and their statutory mandate as the relevant governmental authority in respect of EI benefit entitlement.

154. The Class Members relied on these representations to their detriment. This detrimental reliance included:

(a) foregoing sickness benefit claims they would have been entitled to but for the representations of the Commission; and,

(b) making fresh sickness benefit claims following the exhaustion of their parental leave that were subsequently legitimately denied by the Commission.

155. The Class Members have suffered losses as described below as a result of this detrimental reliance.

Unjust Enrichment

156. The plaintiffs pleads that the defendants, as a result of their conduct, have been unjustly enriched in the amount of benefits improperly denied to the Class Members.

157. The Class Members are all persons who have worked in Canada and paid sufficient employment insurance premiums over many years, and specifically, paid sufficient premiums during the Class Period to qualify as a "major attachment claimant" as defined by the EI Act.

158. During the Class Period, Employment Insurance premiums were collected from, and on behalf of, the Class Members as a regulatory charge at a rate sufficient to ensure the Employment Insurance Account (or the "Employment Insurance Operating Account" after January 1, 2009) was able to pay the benefit amounts authorized to be charged to it.

159. Amounts authorized to be charged to the account included sickness benefit payments to which the Class Members were entitled, but were, as outlined above, systematically excluded from as a result of the defendants' conduct.

160. The defendants wrongfully failed to pay the Class Members the benefits to which they were entitled, and were therefore enriched in the amount of benefits that Class Members were entitled to, but did not, receive.

161. Class Members suffered a deprivation. This deprivation included, but was not limited to:

(a) the quantum of improperly denied sickness benefits they applied for; or,

(b) the quantum of sickness benefits they were improperly advised not to apply for which they were entitled to.

162. There is not a single juristic reason why the defendants, having simultaneously engaged in a wrongful claim prevention campaign against the Class Members, while receiving EI premiums intended to compensate for those benefits, should retain the surplus amounts so collected.

THE PLAINTIFFS AND THE CLASS MEMBERS SUFFERED DAMAGES

163. The plaintiffs claim for damages in the monetary amount they have lost in either improperly denied sickness benefits, or the amount of sickness benefits foregone or abandoned as a result of the defendants' wrongful intervention in the claims process as described above. This category of damages includes, but is not limited to:

(a) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, improperly denied by the Commission, and not pursued through the EI appeals process;

(b) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, denied by the Commission, and pursued unsuccessfully through the EI appeals process;

(c) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims which were made unsuccessfully by Class Members following a parental leave; and,

(d) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims never submitted by Class Members due to the negligent and/or wrongful advisements of the Commission that they had no entitlement to such benefits.

164. Further, the plaintiffs claim general damages for inconvenience, loss of time, frustration, anxiety, mental distress and emotional upset related to the pursuit and denial of wrongfully denied claims by Class Members.

RELEVANT LEGISLATION

165. The plaintiffs pleads and ~~rely~~ relies upon the EI Act, the Regulations to the EI Act, the Canada Labour Code R.S.C. 1985 c. L-2, the Employment Standards Act, 2000, S.O. 2000, c. 41, the Employment Standards Code, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-9, an Act Respecting Labour Standards, R.S.Q., c. N-1.1, all other Canadian provincial legislation in respect of employment standards, the Rules, the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34, the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11, the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-15, and the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50.

         (1) the person was not otherwise available for work; or

2. The plaintiff claims on her own behalf and on behalf of all Class Members:

(a) an order pursuant to the Rules certifying this action as a class proceeding and appointing her as the representative plaintiff;

(b) a declaration that the defendant~~s~~ negligently administered and failed to implement the EI Act in a manner that caused damage to the plaintiff~~s~~ and Class Members, as particularized below;

(c) special damages and general damages for negligence in the amount of $450,000,000.00 or such other sums as this court finds appropriate at the trial of the common issues or at a reference or references under the Rules;

(d) prejudgment interest on the amount set out in paragraph 2(c) at the rate of five per cent per annum pursuant to the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-15, or at a rate to be established by this Honourable Court pursuant to the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50;

(h) such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court seems just.

THE NATURE OF THE ACTION

3. This action concerns the defendant's failure, during the Class Period, to implement the 2002 amendment.

4. The 2002 amendment provides that all persons eligible to collect employment insurance benefits under the EI Act who suffered from an illness, injury, or disability before or during their parental leave, could then collect up to fifteen (15) weeks of sickness benefits.

5. Instead of implementing the 2002 amendment, the Commission – on or shortly after March 3, 2002 – implemented a far more modest change to the detriment of the Class. In particular, the Commission at all times during the Class Period implemented the 2002 amendment as if it was designed merely to provide sickness benefits to women for a period of illness, injury, or quarantine suffered while pregnant and before the commencement of any parental leave.

6. Further, the plaintiff pleads that – shortly after the 2002 amendment – the defendant took steps to defeat any chance that anyone, including the plaintiff and Class Members, would ever be able to successfully obtain a sickness benefit for an illness, injury, or quarantine suffered during a parental leave, and despite the provisions of the 2002 amendment.

7. Until the Rougas Decision was released, as particularized below, nobody, including the plaintiff and Class Members, had ever apparently received from the Commission a sickness benefit for an illness, injury, or quarantine suffered during a parental leave.

8. The defendant has refused to implement the Rougas Decision. The plaintiff's application for sickness benefits during a parental leave period was rejected after the Rougas Decision was released and the defendants had determined not to seek judicial review therefrom.

THE PARTIES

Jennifer McCrea

9. McCrea resides in the City of Calgary. During the Class Period, McCrea gave birth to a child, applied for and was in receipt of parental benefits, suffered from an illness, injury, or quarantine during the course of her parental leave, and applied for sickness benefits.

10. McCrea's application for sickness benefits was denied because she was on parental leave or not otherwise available to work at the time of her sickness benefits application.

11. On October 15, 2010, prior to the birth of her child, McCrea was informed by her family doctor that she was suffering from high blood pressure. She was advised to cease working immediately.

12. McCrea informed her employer of her health status and took a flexible leave from her employment as an Office Manager with Safe Self Storage Inc., a Calgary area storage company. Her employer advised her that she was welcome to return at any point during her leave.

13. McCrea also made an application for employment insurance sickness benefits on or about October 20, 2010. As she was expecting the birth of her child within the weeks subsequent to her initial claim, a Service Canada representative advised her that she would be placed directly on maternity benefits as opposed to sickness benefits.

14. McCrea gave birth to Logan McCrea on October 31, 2010 and spent several months spending time with and caring for this child.

15. McCrea was found eligible for fifty (50) weeks of combined maternity and parental benefits inside of a benefit period that was scheduled to extinguish on October 20, 2011.

16. McCrea ultimately received maternity leave benefits payable over 15 weeks and parental benefits paid over 35 weeks, ending on or about, and including, October 15, 2011, and this following a two week waiting period.

17. On May 9, 2011, McCrea had an MRI performed. McCrea suffers from an uncommon genetic mutation which greatly increases her risk of developing breast cancer. As such, she has been closely monitored for symptoms of the disease.

18. The results of the MRI were abnormal, and on July 9, 2011 she underwent an MRI-guided biopsy.

19. McCrea was diagnosed with breast cancer on July 18, 2011.

20. On July 29, 2011 McCrea met with a surgical specialist. Given McCrea's medical history, the surgeon recommended a bilateral mastectomy. Surgery was scheduled for August 11, 2011.

21. McCrea's physicians were initially of the opinion that she would require at least three (3) weeks of recovery time from the date of the surgery.

22. On August 2, 2011, McCrea contacted a Service Canada office by phone and spoke with a Commission agent regarding how to go about making a claim for sickness benefits. She requested a conversion of her parental benefits claim to a sickness benefits claim beginning August 11, 2011.

23. McCrea was advised by the Commission at that time that if the sickness benefits claim was successful, her parental benefits would be temporarily suspended and sickness benefits would be paid during her period of recovery from surgery.

24. McCrea underwent a bilateral mastectomy on August 11, 2011. Following surgery, McCrea became incapacitated. In particular, she was unable to lift her arms and movement was difficult and painful. McCrea also underwent a period of recovery from the emotional trauma commonly associated with the bilateral mastectomy procedure.

25. During this period after the surgery, McCrea was unable to work or do any of the household tasks required to care for her two young children. McCrea's husband and mother completely took over the child care duties while she recovered.

26. On August 19, 2011, McCrea saw her doctor for a post-operative follow up. Her doctor determined that she required additional weeks of recuperation, until at least September 26, 2011. McCrea's treating physician wrote a letter to Service Canada indicating she would remain incapacitated during this period.

27. On or about August 22, 2011, McCrea provided this updated information in-person at a Service Canada office. During this visit to the Service Canada office, she inquired about the status of her benefits. She was told by a Commission agent to phone the central Service Canada hotline during the following week.

28. On August 30, 2011, after making repeated attempts to contact the hotline and receive an update, McCrea received a phone call from a Service Canada worker inquiring about her work availability.

29. Between August 30, 2011 and September 19, 2011, McCrea called Service Canada and left messages, Service Canada called her and left messages, and on occasion McCrea spoke with Service Canada or HRSDC employees. During those latter calls, employees suggested that McCrea's conversion claim may not be accepted.

30. On September 19, 2011, McCrea was advised for the first time by the Commission that they took the position she was ineligible for sickness benefits. Ms McCrea was so advised by one "Helen Wong" who recorded the conversation on "Service Canada" notes or letterhead and then sent a letter of even date on HRSDC letterhead advising McCrea, formally, that her claim for sickness benefits was denied.

31. McCrea was told over the phone, and later in writing, that as she had indicated that she was on a parental leave and had not proven that she would be available for work if she was not sick, she was not eligible for sickness benefits. The Commission thus denied McCrea's claim for sickness benefits in its entirety.

The Commission, HRSDC, Service Canada, and the Defendant

32. During the Class Period, the Commission was responsible for administering, interpreting, and enforcing the EI Act correctly whenever a claimant applied for employment insurance benefits, including parental and sickness benefits.

33. During the Class Period, the Commission was an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada pursuant to the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34 and the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11.

34. During the Class Period, all officers and employees of the Commission were employed by HRSDC.

35. Further, during much of the Class Period, the Commission delegated its powers to administer, interpret, and enforce the EI Act to Service Canada, which was an entity or grouping of Commission or HRSDC employees delegated such powers pursuant to provisions in the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34 and the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11.

36. At all material times, documents sent to the Class Members or maintained in relation to those Class Members relative to their EI parental, sickness, or other benefits claims were styled with the name "Service Canada" or HRSDC.

37. All references to the Commission thus include references to Service Canada, and vice-versa.

38. At all material times, the Minister of HRSDC was responsible for all matters relating to human resources and skills development in Canada over which Parliament has jurisdiction and which are not by law assigned to any other Minister, department, board or agency of the Government of Canada, and this pursuant to the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34 and the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11. At all material times, this responsibility extended to employment insurance benefits provided for in the EI Act.

39. The Defendant, Her Majesty the Queen, is joined herein as representative of the Federal Government of Canada, HRSDC, the Minister of HRSDC, the Commission, and Service Canada.

The History of the EI Act

40. The federal government has administered an employment insurance scheme since the early 1940s. Its purpose initially had been to provide temporary income replacement to workers facing involuntary unemployment. As the next paragraphs demonstrate, the purpose of EI changed over time to incorporate new social norms and thinking, and the EI Act is now widely regarded as a form of "social" insurance designed to provided economic support during periods of temporary interruptions of employment.

41. In the early 1970s, EI was expanded to reflect changing norms in the Canadian labour market, including the increased presence of women into the workforce. This era of reform included the introduction of "special benefits" that provided income replacement for workers unable to work due to sickness or pregnancy.

42. In the 1980s, the EI Act was further expanded to recognize periods of unemployment taken by parents to care for their adoptive or natural born children, defined in paragraph 1 as "parental leave". Parental leave has always been classified as a "special benefit", like sickness and maternity leave.

43. In 1990, the federal government enhanced the EI Act's special benefits provisions by allowing claimants to combine their maternity, parental, and sickness benefits up to a certain amount of weeks. The "bundling" of special benefit entitlements was subject to a strict cap on the maximum amount of benefit weeks allowed. Under the 1996 version of the EI Act, for instance, this cap was set at thirty (30) weeks.

44. By 2001, the amount of parental benefits available to claimants was increased from 10 to 35 weeks in order to enable parents to spend more time at home during their child's early period of life. Following the introduction of enhanced parental benefits in the 2000 federal budget, s.12(5) of the EI Act was amended to provide for a 50 week bundling of special benefits cap.

The McAllister-Windsor Decision

45. On March 9, 2001, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal issued the McAllister-Windsor decision. The complainant in that case challenged the prohibition on stacking special benefits beyond the then 30-week legislated cap. After the cap was extended to 50 weeks, the challenge incorporated a challenge to that cap as well. The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal found that the operation of the provision had an exclusive adverse effect on women and disabled claimants, as only those claimants who sought to combine their full entitlements to 15 weeks of maternity leave, 35 weeks of parental benefits, and 15 weeks sickness benefits, would be subject to a cap limiting the benefits to 50 combined weeks.

46. As a result of the decision, HRDC ("HRDC", as it was stylized prior to 2003) was ordered by the Tribunal to cease applying the provisions of the EI Act in a discriminatory manner.

The Response of HRDC to McAllister-Windsor

47. HRDC considered several options in respect of how the department would respond to the ruling. Following the release of the decision, the Ministers of HRDC and Finance were informed by Departmental staff that the government had until March 3, 2002 to come into compliance with the Human Rights Tribunal directive.

48. By November 30, 2001, HRDC had drafted a proposal calling for an amendment to the EI Act. The amendment was intended to provide an extension of the 50-week cap on benefits by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy and "during a parental benefit claim", thereby ensuring the EI Act did not discriminate against any claimant on the basis of gender or disability.

49. The HRDC proposal was approved. An amendment to the EI Act intended to implement the proposal was included in changes to the EI program announced in relation to the December 10, 2001 Federal budget. It is this amendment that became the 2002 amendment defined above.

50. HRDC staff prepared a set of question-and-answer statements for their Minister's use in discussing the proposed change. In these statements, it was consistently indicated that the 2002 amendment was intended to provide an exception to the 50 week cap for special benefits by extending it by one week for each week of sickness benefits taken by biological mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental leave claim.

51. HRDC advised the Minister to inform the media and relevant stakeholders that the 2002 amendment was needed because, "[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits".

Bill C-49 [the 2002 amendment]

52. In 2001, the Government introduced Bill C-49, the Budget Implementation Act, 2001. Included in Part 3 of the legislation were improvements to the EI Act. These improvements included the new provisions designed to ensure that claimants who qualified for maternity, parental and sickness benefits would be provided with an expanded benefit period of up to sixty-five (65) weeks. It is this that constitutes the 2002 amendment.

53. The plaintiff pleas and relies on the official statements of all representatives of the Government who spoke to the Bill in the House of Commons, Senate, and in Parliamentary committees. Without exception, these statements confirmed that the government's intent was to directly implement HRDC's proposed response to the McAllister-Windsor directive and decision. Every government representative that spoke to this portion of the Bill indicated that the 2002 amendment would ensure that the cap on special benefits would be extended for each week of sickness benefits taken by a mother during their pregnancy or during their parental leave.

54. Further to paragraph 53, the plaintiff pleas and relies more particularly on the following statements:

    (a) The statements contained in the November 30, 2001 "EI Court Challenges" briefing document prepared for the Minister of Finance, and in particular the statement indicating the HRDC proposal would “[e]xtend the 50-week cap on benefits for women by one week for every week of sickness benefits claimed during pregnancy, and during a parental benefits claim.”;

(b) The statements contained in the 2002 document prepared for the Minister of HRDC titled “Briefing Note: Program Amendments Included in Budget Implementation Bill”, and in particular the statements indicating that the 50 week cap to special benefits in the EI Act would “be extended by one week of sickness benefits up to 65 weeks when paid to biological to mothers during their pregnancy or during their parental benefit claim” (sic) and that the amendment was needed because “[i]n practice, some biological mothers who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits may be unable to claim all of their special benefits”;

(c) The statements contained in a document entitled “Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: Why Making Changes” produced for the Minister of HRDC, indicating the change was made to benefit mothers “who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy or while receiving parental benefits [who] may be unable to claim all of their special benefits”;

(d) The statements contained in a document entitled “Medically Required Extension of Cap on Special Benefits: More Benefits to Biological Mothers”, indicating the Bill C-49 change would mean “the total number of weeks of special benefits a claimant could receive would be extended by a limited number of weeks for biological mothers when they use sickness benefits during pregnancy or during a parental benefit claim.”;

(e) The February 6, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum, made to the House of Commons, that Bill C-49 “increases [the EI Act benefits] ceiling by one week for each week of sick leave taken by a mother during her pregnancy or while she is receiving parental benefits, so that she may benefit fully from the special benefits.”;

(f) The February 20, 2002 statement of the Hon. John McCallum to the Standing Committee on Finance that “Bill C-49 further improves the delivery of parental benefits under EI […] To enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, effective March 3, 2002 this cap will increase by one week for each week of sickness benefits she takes while pregnant or while receiving parental benefits.”;

(g) The March 15, 2002 statement of MP Bryon Wilfert, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, to the House of Commons that "The current 50 week cap on the combined amount of sickness, maternity and parental benefits an individual can receive under EI means women who become ill may not have full access to extended benefits" and that, "[t]o enable a mother to receive her full entitlement to special benefits, effective March 3, 2002 the cap would increase by one week for each week of sickness benefits she took while pregnant or while receiving parental benefits".

(h) The March 19, 2002 statement of the Hon. Anne C. Cools, made to the Senate in respect of the C-49 changes to the EI Act, that “to enable a mother to receive her full entitlement of special benefits, [the legislative] cap increases by one week for each week of sickness benefits she takes while pregnant or receiving parental benefits.”; and,

(i) The statement contained in a backgrounder published on the Employment Insurance Commission’s website following the coming into force of Bill C-49 that indicated the change was in respect of those mothers “who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits”.

THE RESPONSE OF THE EI COMMISSION TO THE 2002 AMENDMENT

55. The Commission and the defendants did not adopt the 2002 amendment following its coming into force. In particular, the change described in the proposal which they had drafted for the relevant Ministers and which was now set out in the 2002 amendment was simply not implemented.

56. The defendant's actions during this time laid the foundation upon which the Commission would, throughout the Class Period, wrongly and tortiously administer the EI program and incorrectly and tortiously advise the Class Members regarding their entitlement to sickness benefits.

57. In the months that followed the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission took steps to ensure the 2002 amendment would not be implemented. In particular, the Commission did not describe the 2002 amendment as being designed to benefit parental benefit recipients who suffered from an illness, injury or quarantine during their parental leave.

58. Instead, the Commission implemented narrow aspects of the 2002 amendment in such a way as to defeat all sickness benefits claims by the Class Members. For example, the Commission incorrectly adopted “availability to work” criteria to 2002 amendment claims such that no claimant who made a sickness benefits claim while on a parental leave would be deemed by the Commission to be sufficiently “available for work” and, thus, no claimant would ever qualify for sickness benefits. This implementation ignored the clear wording of the very proposal the Commission and HRDC had drafted and submitted to the relevant Ministers, and which had subsequently been passed as the 2002 amendment by Parliament.

59. The Commission’s revised position regarding the scope of the 2002 amendment was confused and inconsistent, but for the most part the position misrepresented entirely the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

60. The defendant's internal and external communications during the Class Period at times described the 2002 amendment as providing sickness benefits to women “before or after” the commencement of a maternity leave, while other public communications assured claimants that benefits would be available “before or after” a maternity or parental leave.

61. In addition to denying claimants who sought sickness benefits during their maternity or parental leave periods, the latter “before or after maternity or parental leave” explanation of the change incorrectly purported to make benefits available to claimants who file a claim “after” a parental leave. In fact, a sickness benefits claim filed by a claimant after their parental leave was impossible to make, as all eligible claimants seeking to file a new claim after their parental leave claim had been exhausted would be rejected. In practice, these claimants would find that their original parental claim would be expired, and that they lacked sufficient qualifying hours to make a valid fresh claim. Thus, a sickness benefits claim submitted following a parental leave claim could not succeed, the Commission’s representations notwithstanding.

62. Further to this misrepresentation, the “before or after” explanation of the effect of the change was an entirely inaccurate reflection of the Commission’s own understanding of the 2002 amendment, as is reflected in the materials the Commission produced in proposing the change and the Hansard statements of the parliamentarians responsible for the Bill pleaded above. These materials, without exception, expressly indicated the change was being made in respect of sickness benefit claims made before or during a parental leave claim only. At no point in any of the documents drafted by the Commission prior to the passage of the 2002 amendment was there any indication that the change was intended to provide sickness benefits “after” a parental leave claim.

63. The defendant's tortious implementation of the 2002 amendment included, but was not limited to, the following activities:

(1) “Legislative Training” of Commission Employees

64. In the months following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the Commission undertook an extensive, country-wide “legislative training” program for Commission employees in respect of the 2002 amendment.

65. Participants in this training were provided with materials and instructions regarding the effect of the 2002 amendment. These materials again reflected that benefits might be available for claimants "before or after" a parental leave, which was not in accordance with the Commission's clear understanding of the 2002 amendment as providing for benefits before or during a parental leave claim. Participants to the legislative training were at no point advised that parental leave claimants could make sickness claims while on their parental leave, or that claimants who sought to make a new claim "after" their leave might be disqualified on qualifying-hours grounds.

66. Further, during the course of this training, the Commission did not advise those being trained to cease applying and interpreting the EI Act so as to require that all sickness benefits claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness benefits period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness benefits claim made during a parental leave.

67. The inadequacy of the training provided to Commission Employees was exacerbated by the fact that, in all written materials such employees would have available to them to review a sickness benefits claim made during a parental leave, those materials inaccurately set out or actively defeated the 2002 amendment. Particulars of some of these materials are set out below.

68. In addition to those materials, the Commission failed to create an accurate jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, or alternatively failed to update its existing jurisprudence library, case summaries or digests, to reflect the presence of the 2002 amendment. The failures included maintaining cases and digests of sickness benefits cases which indicated that, for all sickness benefits claimants, the claimant must demonstrate an "availability" to work on each and every day of their sickness benefits claim.

(2) Improper Updating of the Employment Insurance Website

69. At all times during the Class Period, HRDC and HRSDC maintained an Employment Insurance website currently located on the Internet, or world wide web at the URL http://www.servicecanada.gc.ca/eng/sc/ei/index.shtml.

70. The Employment Insurance website allowed claimants to submit and request information regarding EI claims, and provided those seeking EI benefits with advice and information about the program, its history, the operation of the EI Act, and the eligibility of claimants in various scenarios to obtain EI benefits. During the Class Period, claimants were routinely referred to the website by Commission agents. The website was portrayed by the defendant as a trustworthy source of information regarding employment insurance.

71. During a brief period shortly after the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, the website published some information regarding the 2002 amendment which at points accurately described the effect of the 2002 amendment. On April 10, 2002, the Commission posted a backgrounder under the website's "What's New?" section at the URL:

> http://web.archive.org/web/20020402054832/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/menu/budget2001_e.shtml.

This backgrounder characterized the 2002 amendment as affecting biological mothers "who claim sickness benefits during their pregnancy, or while receiving parental benefits" and stated the change was meant to ensure "full access to special benefits for these mothers", while indicating the 2002 amendment would allow "full access to special benefits for mothers who claim sickness benefits before or after their maternity claim".

72. This backgrounder was present on the website for approximately 18 months and was removed on or around January, 2004. Following the removal of this language, the website would never again use language indicating a sickness benefits claim would be possible while receiving special benefits, including parental benefits.

73. On or about July 18, 2002, the Commission updated its website's Frequently Asked Questions ("FAQ") section in respect of "Maternity, parental and sickness benefits". This update, which was present on the website throughout the Class Period, advised claimants that "A combination of maternity, parental and sickness benefits can be received up to a combined maximum of 50 weeks".

74. The website's FAQ document, following the passage of the 2002 amendment and throughout the Class Period, included a proviso for claimants who "received sickness benefits before or after [their] maternity benefits." In this section, the website illustrated that sickness benefits would only be available to those claimants who received sickness benefits before their parental benefits commenced. The scenarios set out by the defendant on its website highlighted that claimants seeking a sickness benefit following the commencement of parental benefits would be ineligible for further benefits.

75. Further, not one scenario described in the FAQ document on the website set out a situation whereupon an eligible claimant would be entitled to receive sickness benefits for an illness, injury, or quarantine suffered during a parental leave.

76. During the Class Period, the website has consistently provided inaccurate information to those seeking information on the changes introduced by the 2002 amendment. On July 24, 2008, the website published a document which purported to describe the EI Act's "Recent Legislative Context". This document informed the public that, effective March 3, 2002, the 2002 amendment would "ensure access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

77. On October 16, 2009, the website published a similar document indicating that the 2002 amendment changed the maximum number of combined weeks of special benefits from 50 to 65 weeks, and that "these provisions ensure full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits."

78. Visitors to the website during the Class Period, then, would be alternately advised that sickness benefits would be available to them if they applied for them prior to or following a maternity claim or prior to or following a maternity or parental claim.

79. No Class Members, and no visitor to the website, would have ever been advised that they would be eligible for sickness benefits if a claim was made during a parental leave claim.

80. Further, the plaintiff pleads that, at all times during the Class Period, the Commission maintained on its website an interpretation of the sickness benefits requirement that all sickness benefits claimants must demonstrate that they would otherwise be available for work during each and every day of their sickness benefits period. As pleaded above, such an interpretation of the EI Act will always defeat a sickness benefits claim made during a parental leave.

81. The plaintiff pleads, and the fact is, that in addition to the websites and documents set out above but excluding the FAQ document set out earlier, the defendant at all material times in all documentation prepared by the defendant, in printed or electronic format, materially misrepresented the scope of the 2002 amendment. In particular, these material misrepresentations of fact, including by facts stated expressly or by material omission were:

    (a) statements that only those making a sickness benefits claim before or after a maternity leave or parental leave claim would be eligible to obtain a sickness benefits claim; and,

    (b) statements that all sickness benefits claimants had to demonstrate that, on every day during which they were claiming sickness benefits, they were otherwise available for work, a legal requirement that would always defeat a sickness benefits claim made during a parental leave period.

82. In its first monitoring and assessment report drafted by HRDC for its Minister, for instance, which report was drafted shortly after the 2002 amendment was enacted, HRDC wrote that “[e]ffective March 3, 2002, [the 2002 amendment] ensure[s] full access to special benefits for biological mothers who claim sickness benefits prior to or following maternity or parental benefits".

83. This language, limiting the 2002 amendment to sickness benefits claims filed before or after maternity or parental leave periods, was consistently used in each written, electronic, and publically available document produced by the defendants during the Claim Period, including in most of the documents pleaded and relied on with more particularity above and below.

(3) Failure to Update the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles

84. The plaintiff pleads and relies upon the Commission's Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles in effect from time to time during the Class Period. The version published on February 21, 2004 remains available at the URL:

http://web.archive.org/web/20040221011714/http://www.hrdc-drhc.gc.ca/ae-ei/loi-law/guide-digest/13_2_0_e.shtml.

85. At all times during the Class Period, the Digest contained and contains the principles applied by the Commission when making decisions on claims for benefits under the EI Act. It is intended as a reference tool for all users, including those without a legal background or knowledge of employment insurance, and including all Class Members.

86. Further, the Digest was one of the primary documents, if not the primary document, made available to the Commission to assist it in implementing the EI Act during the Class Period.

87. While the Digest was revised multiple times following the March 3, 2002 coming into force of the 2002 amendment, language indicating that claimants may have an entitlement to combinations of special benefits beyond 50 weeks did not appear in the Digest until September, 2006. Thus, any claimant referred to the Digest as a source of authoritative information regarding their entitlement to special benefits would remain wholly unaware until September 2006 that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

88. Further, all employees or agents of the Commission charged with the duty of reviewing claims and implementing the EI Act would, on reviewing the Digest until September, 2006, remain wholly unaware that any change may have been made by the 2002 amendment.

89. This lack of updating included, but was not limited to, Chapter 13.2.1 of the Digest, regarding "Limits to the Number of Weeks of Special Benefits Payable". In the period between March 3, 2002 and September, 2006 this section stated:

> Special benefits may be paid in any combination, provided the claimant proves entitlement for each type of benefit, for a maximum total payable of 50 weeks. For example a qualified claimant could receive 5 weeks sickness, 15 weeks maternity and 30 weeks parental benefits, provided she is able to prove entitlement to each type of benefit.

90. Thus, prior to the update that was made in September, 2006, the Commission inaccurately advised claimants of their entitlements under the 2002 amendment. The Digest, as it read prior to September, 2006, plainly instructed potential claimants and claims administrators that parental benefit recipients had no entitlement to a combination of special benefits beyond 50 weeks of benefits.

91. Further, in all sections of the Digest pertinent to sickness benefits claims, and at all times during the Class Period, the Digest erroneously instructed potential claimants that they must always prove, on each day of their sickness benefits claim, an "availability for work", wholly ignoring the impact of the 2002 amendment.

92. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert EI claimants that they could make a valid sickness benefits claim while on a parental leave.

93. The Commission, at no time during or following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, updated the Digest to alert Commission employees, staff, and agents, that they must accept a sickness benefits claim made by a claimant who is on a parental leave.

(4) Consistent Rejection of Relevant Sickness Benefits Claims

94. Following the coming into force of the 2002 amendment, front-line Commission employees, agents, and representatives began denying all sickness claims made by claimants while on a parental leave.

95. In many cases, these denials would follow the confused verbal and written advice to claimants made by inadequately trained front-line staff. In some circumstances, Class Members were told outright at the beginning of the process that the defendant took the position they had no entitlement to benefits. In others, Class Members were initially instructed by Commission agents to either wait until the expiry of their parental leave claim before applying, or alternatively, to ensure the apply prior to their expiry of parental benefits.

96. When claimants did make claims, these confusions were resolved by "elevating" claims to more senior representatives of the Commission. The result of elevated claims was unanimous. Higher-ranking Commission employees arrived at a single, incorrect resolution to all 2002 amendment claims made by maternity or parental claim recipients: these claimants could not claim sickness benefits due to not meeting the availability requirements set out in s.18 of the EI Act.

(5) Aggressive Approach to Claimant Appeals

97. In all cases where Class Members who were affected by a denial as set out above appealed the Commission's decision denying a sickness benefits claim, the Commission fought vigorously against any claim of entitlement to sickness benefits by claimants during a parental leave.

98. A system of appeals is set out in Part VI of the EI Act, upon which the plaintiff pleads and relies. This system includes a first-stage appeal at the Board of Referees, and provides any party a further right of appeal to an Umpire.

99. Almost invariably, claimants who appear before the EI appeals system do not have legal representation and are not legally trained. Further, due to the tremendous value placed on expediency within the first stage of the EI Appeals process, claimants have extremely limited amounts of time to compile an evidentiary record from the date they receive a decision to the scheduling of a hearing date. In the case of combined maternity-parental-sickness claimants, those seeking to appeal the Commission's decision would also invariably be caring for newborn children and would be recovering from or battling an injury, illness, or quarantine.

100. While these claimants were at a considerable disadvantage vis-à-vis the Commission in the appeals process, the defendant expended considerable resources in defending all appeals made in respect of combined maternity-parental-sickness claims made under the 2002 amendment. In those cases where claimants were successful at the first stage of appeal, the Commission would invariably appeal to the Umpire. At the Umpire stage, claimants would be forced to again defend the record put before the Board of Referees. And again, claimants would typically be at a disadvantage in regards to resources and legal representation.

101. Further, throughout the Class Period, the Commission acted both as the party which had rejected the Class Members' claims and as the litigant prosecuting appeals to the Board of Referees and the Umpire. Throughout the Class Period, the Commission controlled the materials presented to the Board of Referees as well as the submissions made to the Board. During the Class Period, the defendant never once presented the Board or an Umpire materials setting out the purpose and effect of the 2002 amendment.

102. This strategy resulted in the dismal failure of a long series of maternity-parental-sickness benefit claimants who had their claims dismissed, primarily on the ground that they were unable to demonstrate 'availability for work'.

NATALYA ROUGAS OBTAINS SICKNESS BENEFITS

103. Rougas became, in 2011, the first person to unequivocally obtain the sickness benefits promised by Parliament in the 2002 amendment.

104. Rougas obtained these sickness benefits over a year and half after first applying for them.

105. Rougas, like the plaintiff, was an eligible employment insurance claimant, gave birth to a child, and took a maternity and parental leave from her employment, all while caring for herself or her child.

106. Towards the end of her parental leave period, in January 2010, Rougas was diagnosed with breast cancer.

107. Rougas had to undergo significant treatment for this illness and as a result was unable to return to work.

108. Towards the end of her parental leave, on or about January 16, 2010, Rougas applied for sickness benefits.

109. At the time she applied, Rougas was incorrectly advised orally over the telephone by the defendants that her application for sickness benefits would not be permitted under the EI Act but that it would be accepted if she applied after the end of her parental leave period. Rougas applied for sickness benefits anyway notwithstanding these two misrepresentations.

110. On or about February 22, 2010, Rougas' sickness benefits claim was rejected by letter because she "[could] not prove that if [she] were not sick [she] would be working because [she] was on parental leave with an expected return to work date of February 1, 2010".

111. On or about March 8, 2010, Rougas appealed this decision to a Board of Referees.

112. On May 11, 2010 Rougas appeared at the appeal without counsel and with her husband, Stavros Rougas. Rougas' appeal was dismissed on that same day.

113. On July 7, 2010, Rougas appealed the Board of Referees decision to an Umpire established under the EI Act.

114. Rougas expended considerable amounts as disbursements given her financial constraints to pursue her appeal. A large part of these were to cover the cost of an access to information search that yielded the key legislative history materials concerning the purpose of the 2002 amendment.

115. The Umpire who wrote the Rougas Decision admitted these legislative history materials into evidence and relied extensively on them in support of the Rougas Decision.

116. The defendant, before and during the hearing of Rougas' appeal, argued that these legislative history materials ought not to be admitted into evidence.

117. The plaintiff pleads that the Rougas Decision conclusively determines that, since the 2002 amendment, all Class Members who made a sickness benefits claim were eligible for sickness benefits.

No Judicial Review of the Rougas Decision

118. The defendant had a right under the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7 to seek judicial review of the Rougas Decision to the Federal Court of Appeal.

119. On or about August 17, 2011 , the defendant announced that it was not seeking judicial review of the Rougas Decision.

120. In so doing, the defendant, in a prepared written statement read by a spokesperson for the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada, stated that "[i]n regards to Ms. Rougas' case, it was indeed unfortunate and as a government we are committed to maintaining fairness...".

121. Notwithstanding the Rougas Decision and its confirmation that the 2002 amendment provides for the payment of sickness benefits to Class Members, including the plaintiff and Rougas, the aforesaid spokeswoman of the Minister of Human Resources and Skills Development Canada misrepresented in the same written statement that “[t]he changes required [as a result of the Rougas Decision] are legislative”.

122. The plaintiff pleads that no legislative changes are required and that, since the 2002 amendment, the necessary legislative provisions have been in place to permit all Class Members to obtain sickness benefits.

The Rougas Decision is Not Being Implemented

123. Despite the Rougas Decision and the defendant's decision not to seek judicial review from it, the Rougas Decision is not being implemented.

124. In particular, the Commission denied McCrea’s sickness benefits application on the very grounds that were rejected in the Rougas Decision, namely, that at the time she applied for sickness benefits, the plaintiff was not otherwise available for work.

CAUSE OF ACTION

General Duty of Care, Negligence, and Negligent Implementation of the Statutory Scheme

125. At all times during the Class Period, the defendant owed a duty of care to Class Members that was breached by its negligent conduct in respect of administering the Employment Insurance scheme, and in particular the 2002 amendment.

126. It was foreseeable that negligently implementing an income compensation scheme would cause the Class Members to suffer damages in relation to the loss of their entitlements, as well as the time, frustration and emotional upset associated with the pursuit of improperly denied claims.

127. The Class Members were in a relationship of proximity to the defendant. They had entered into a special relationship with the defendant as a result of their previous engagement in the claims process managed by the defendants in its statutory role as the administrator of Employment Insurance benefits.

128. The defendant communicated directly, specifically, and repeatedly with each Class Member in respect of their maternity, parental, and sickness benefits claims. The defendant had already approved, in the case of all Class Members, their valid maternity and parental benefits claims.

129. The defendant engaged in a course of communications with each Class Member. These included:

(a) Verbal representations during in-person meetings with agents of the defendants at physical Service Canada kiosk locations;

(b) Verbal representations to Class Members made over the telephone by Service Canada agents;

(c) Written representations in formal correspondence delivered to the Class Members in respect of their claims; and,

(d) Written advisements in the form of communications tools to which the Class Members were referred, such as the defendant's website, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles and the EI Jurisprudence Library.

130. Further, all Class Members were in a position of reliance upon the Commission to administer their benefit claims with reasonable diligence, as all members of the Class were persons in the vulnerable position of having to simultaneously care for one or more young children while also coping with an injury, illness, or quarantine.

131. The defendant breached the duty of care owed to the Class to properly ascertain the scope of its statutory authority and implement the Employment Insurance program with reasonable diligence. Particulars of the defendant's negligence include the failures pleaded above, and also include:

(a) The defendant's post-March 3, 2002 fostering of a description of the EI Act that disregarded the defendant's own knowledge of the intent of the 2002 amendment;

(b) The defendant's implementation of a “legislative training” regime for its employees which contained inaccurate representations of the effect of the EI Act and the 2002 amendment specifically;

(c) The defendant's failure throughout the Class Period to properly train its front-line staff, such that the plaintiff and Class Members were subject to changing, inconsistent, contradictory and ultimately incorrect advice from agents of the defendants regarding their entitlement to benefits;

(d) The defendant's negligent maintenance of its publically available Employment Insurance website, such that throughout the Class Period the website contained misleading, contradictory and incorrect statements regarding the 2002 amendment;

(e) The defendant's negligent failure to update its key document, the Digest of Benefit Entitlement Principles, in a timely manner to reflect the coming-into-force of the 2002 amendment;

(f) The defendant's failure, when the Digest was updated, to properly describe the effect of the 2002 amendment, and to retain misleading and inaccurate descriptions of the relevant entitlement principles; and,

(g) The defendant's aggressive approach to denying sickness benefits claims by Class Members and then representing itself on appeals to the Board of Referees and Umpire to successfully oppose such appeals.

132. The plaintiff has suffered damages, detailed below, as a result of this negligent conduct.

THE PLAINTIFF AND THE CLASS MEMBERS SUFFERED DAMAGES

133. The plaintiff claims for damages in the monetary amount they have lost in either improperly denied sickness benefits, or the amount of sickness benefits foregone or abandoned as a result of the defendant's wrongful intervention in the claims process as described above. This category of damages includes, but is not limited to:

    (a) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, improperly denied by the Commission, and not pursued through the EI appeals process; and,

    (b) damages in the amount of sickness benefit claims made by Class Members, denied by the Commission, and pursued unsuccessfully through the EI appeals process.

134. Further, the plaintiff claims general damages for inconvenience, loss of time, frustration, anxiety, mental distress and emotional upset related to the pursuit and denial of wrongfully denied claims by Class Members.

RELEVANT LEGISLATION

135. The plaintiffs pleads and relies upon the EI Act, the Regulations to the EI Act, the Canada Labour Code R.S.C. 1985 c. L-2, the Employment Standards Act, 2000, S.O. 2000, c. 41, the Employment Standards Code, R.S.A. 2000, c. E-9, an Act Respecting Labour Standards, R.S.Q., c. N-1.1, all other Canadian provincial legislation in respect of employment standards, the Rules, the Federal Courts Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. F-7, the Department of Human Resources and Skills Development Act, S.C. 2005, c. 34, the Department of Human Resources Act, S.C. 1996, c. 11, the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-15, and the Crown Liability and Proceedings Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-50.

SCHEDULE “K” - ADMINISTRATION PLAN

Introduction

1. This document is intended to set out the administration and implementation plan of the Minister of Employment and Social Development Canada (“ESDC”). More particularly, the Transformation and Integrated Service Management branch of ESDC will have primary responsibility to review claims for and process payment of damages in accordance with the terms of the Settlement Agreement entered into between the parties.

2. The work completed by ESDC on the File Review Project will substantially expedite the processing of claims. ESDC possesses the expertise and information required to calculate and pay Individual Payments. ESDC also possesses the requisite experience and knowledge to process the claims, which are based on amounts of statutory sickness benefits not paid. To that end, ESDC has assembled an experienced team of processing agents to administer claims, including payment of damages.

3. The Plan includes:

   (a) a sample of the documents to be used to communicate with class members;

   (b) the information to be shared between ESDC and Cavalluzzo LLP, counsel for the Plaintiff and Class (“Cavalluzzo” or “Class Counsel”); and

   (c) a schedule for reporting to Class Counsel and the Court with respect to the processing of claims.

4. This plan is a living document and may require modifications from time-to-time in order to ensure that the Court and Claimants are provided with the relevant information, as well as to address the various possible administrative matters that may arise in the course of the Claims Process.

5. Capitalized terms used in this Schedule shall have the meaning assigned to them in the Settlement Agreement.

Roles and Responsibilities

6. ESDC will be responsible for receiving, reviewing and processing Claims.

7. Department of Justice Counsel (“Justice”) will assist, as required, to ensure the timely administration of settlement and the implementation of this Plan.

8. Where requested by a claimant, Cavalluzzo will provide legal advice and assistance with the claims process at no additional cost to either Canada or class members. Class Counsel will continue to liaise with Justice to ensure timely processing of claims at no additional cost to either ESDC or class members.

9. Subject to applicable laws that may require disclosure, all information exchanged between the parties will be treated as confidential and subject to a secure transmission protocol via either password or encryption.

10. When ESDC is communicating with Claimants, its written communications will include a message to the effect that should Claimants have any questions concerning the appeal process and the class action process generally, advice may be sought from Cavalluzzo LLP, 474 Bathurst Street, Suite 300, Toronto Ontario M5T 2S6, which can be contacted at 1-844-964-5559 (toll free in Canada) or 416-964-5559 or by e-mail at EIsicknesscase@cavaluzzo.com.

12. Cavalluzzo and Justice shall work cooperatively in implementing this Plan.

Procedures and Guidance Documents

13. A dedicated group of processing agents employed by ESDC will be assigned to process payments to class members ("Agents").

14. All Agents will receive training with respect to issues in this litigation, including parameters of the class definition. The processing agents will be supervised by an experienced manager.

15. ESDC will prepare all necessary documentation to ensure that Claims will be administered in a consistent fashion. The following documents will be finalized prior to the commencement of the Claims Period:

Provision of Medical Information on file to Claimants

17. Where a request is made with respect to disclosure of any medical evidence on file, ESDC will provide the information verbally. Only in exceptional cases will ESDC provide copies of the medical certificate prior to submission of Claims.

Internal Review where denial proposed

18. Where the Agents determine that a Claimant is not an Eligible Class Member, before a denial is issued, the case will be referred to an internal review committee formed by ESDC.

19. The internal review committee may review the file, obtain additional information from the Claimant where appropriate, and confirm or deny the proposal to deny the Claim.

20. Where it is determined that a Claimant is not eligible to receive a payment under the Settlement Agreement, that person will be advised of their right to submit an application for Review of Determination to a prothonotary designated by the Federal Court of Canada.

21. ESDC may reconsider its decision at its own initiative or after consultation with the Monitor, regardless of whether an appeal is filed or not, so long as such decision is made prior to 30 days after the end of the claims period.
